- TRADED. adj. [from trade.] Veried; practised.
Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without such a rheum:
And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.
Eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.
- TRADER. n. f. [from trade.]
1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.
Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders, Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.
Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal. Child on Trade.
That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift.
2. One long used in the methods of money getting; a practitioner.
TRADES-FOLK. n. f. [trade and folk.] People employed in trades.
By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRA

- TRADESMAN. n. f. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.
I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakespeare.
- They rather had beheld Dissentious numbers pest'ring streets; than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Order a trade thither and thence to as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them. Bacon.
Tradesmen might conjecture what things they were like to have in their respective dealings. Graunt.
M. Jordain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.
From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.
Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.
Boastful and rough, your first son is a quire;
The next a tradesman, meek and much a liar. Pope's Ep.
- TRADEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traf-fick.
Ye tradeful merchants that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain. Spenser.
- TRADITION. n. f. [traditio, Fr. traditio, Lat.]
1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.
To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hosker, b. iii.
2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.
They the truth
With superstitious and traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton.
Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal, or fond tradition rise;
But sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day. Pope's Statius.
- TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]
1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.
Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.
If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.
2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites. Not used, nor proper.
God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege Of sanctuary!
— You are too senseless obstinate, my lord; Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare. Rich. II.
- TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]
1. By transmission from age to age.
There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.
It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown's Vulgar Err.
- TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.] Delivered by tradition.
Suppose the same traditional strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain, Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.
Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditional sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.
The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditional account of him to after-ages. Addison on the Christian Religion.
- TRADITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trade, Latin.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.
Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryd. H. and Pant.
- TO TRADE. v. a. [trader, Lat. tradere, Fr.]
1. To censure; to condemn; to reprove as blameable; to calumniate; to decry. Swift.
The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all mens devotion towards them. Hosker, b. v.

TRA

- Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift, when other things also traduced in the public duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hooker, b. iv.
- Whilft calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth; as long as men are malicious and designing they will be traducing. Gov. of the Tongue.
- From that preface he took his hint; though he had the benefit not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dryden's Fab.
2. To propagate; to encrease by deriving one from another. None are so gross as to contend for this, That souls from bodies may traduced be; Between whose natures no proportion is, When root and branch in nature still agree. Dewies.
- From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hale.
- Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant; whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glanville's Scip.
- TRADUCEMENT. n. f. [from traduce.] Censure; obloquy. Rome must know The value of her own: 'twere a concealment Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, To hide your doings. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- TRADUCER. n. f. [from traduce.] A false censurer; a calumniator. Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.
- TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived. The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.
- If by traduction came thy mind, Our wonder is the less to find A soul so charming from a stock so good; Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.
2. Tradition; transmission from one to another. Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.
3. Conveyance. Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping: though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
4. Transition. The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon.
- TRAFFICK. n. f. [from traffico, Fr. traffico, Italian.] 1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick's thy god. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
- A merchant of great traffick through the world. Shakespeare.
- As the first of these was, for his great wisdom, stiled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 41.
2. Commodities; subject of traffick. You'll see a draggled damsel From Billingsgate her filthy traffick bear. Gay.
- TO TRAFFICK. v. n. [from traffico, Fr. trafficare, Italian.] 1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities. They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
2. To trade meanly or mercenarily. Saucy and overbold! how did you dare To trade and traffick with Macbeth, In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- How hast thou dar'd to think so vilely of me, That I would condescend to thy mean arts, And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin? Rowe.
- TRAFFICKER. n. f. [from traffico, Fr. from traffick.] Trader; merchant. Your Argosies with portly sail, Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood, Do overpeer the petty traffickers That curtsy to them. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Add.
- TRAGACANTH. n. f. [from tragacantha, Lat.] A sort of gum to

TRA

- which this name has been given, because it proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called. Tragacantha.
- TRAGEDIAN. n. f. [from tragedy, tragædia, Lat.] 1. A writer of tragedy. Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian. Stillingfleet.
2. An actor of tragedy. I can counterfeit the deep tragedian; Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side, Tremble and start at wagging of a straw, Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
- To well-lung'd tragedian's rage They recommend their labours of the stage. Dryden.
- TRAGEDY. n. f. [from tragedia, Fr. tragædia, Lat.] 1. A dramatick representation of a serious action. Thoudands more, that yet suspect no peril, Will now conclude their plotted tragedy. Shakespeare.
- All our tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided. Taylor's holy living.
- Imitate the filter of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action. Dryden.
- An anthem to their god Dionysus, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat-song or tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.
- There to her heart sad tragedy address'd The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast. Pope.
2. Any mournful or dreadful event. I shall laugh at this, That they, who brought me in my master's hate, I live to look upon their tragedy. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
- I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. K. Ch.
- TRAGIC. adj. [from tragicus, Lat. tragique, Fr.] 1. Relating to tragedy. The root whereof and tragic effect, Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfullest muse of nine, That won't it the tragic stage for to direct, In funeral complaints and wailful time Reveal to me. Spenser's Muirpothman.
- Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward; And the beholders of this tragic play, Th' adulterer Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray, Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves. Shakespeare's R. III.
2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful. A dire induction I am witness to; And will to France, hoping the consequence Will prove as bitter, black, and tragic. Shakespeare.
- The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day, Is crept into the bosom of the sea: And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades, That drag the tragic melancholy night. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
- Why look you still so stern and tragic? Shakespeare.
- So tragic and merited a fate Shall swallow those who God and justice hate. Sandys.
- I now must change those notes to tragic. Milton.
- The tale of this song is a pretty tragic story; and pleases because it is a copy of nature. Addison.
- Bid them dress their bloody altars With every circumstance of tragic pomp. Rowe.
- TRAGICALLY. adv. [from tragic.] 1. In a tragic manner; in a manner befitting tragedy. Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically. Dryden.
2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously. TRAGICALNESS. n. f. [from tragic.] Mournfulness; calamitousness. Like bold Phaëton we despise all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the *tragic*ness of the event as in the influence of the undertaking. Decay of Piety.
- TRAGICOMEDY. n. f. [from tragicomedia, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events. On the world's stage, when our applause grows high, For acting here life's tragicomedy, The lookers-on will say we act not well, Unless the last the former scenes excel. Denham.
- The faults of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragicomedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.
- We have often had tragicomedies upon the English theatre with success: but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.
- TRAGICOMICAL. adj. [from tragicomica, Fr. tragic and comical.] 1. Relating to tragicomedy. The whole art of the tragicomical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished. Gay's What d'ye call it.
2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow. TRAGI-

TRA

- TRAGICOMICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner. Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not, So I was tragicomically got. Brampston.
- TO TRAJECT. v. a. [from trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw. The disputes of those assuming confident, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail. Glanville's Scip.
- If there are different kinds of ether, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all celestial bodies. Grew's Cosm. b. i.
- If the sun's light be trajected through three or more crofs prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.
- TRAJECT. n. f. [from trajectus, Fr. trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage. What notes and garments he doth give thee, Bring to the traject, to the common ferry, Which trades to Venice. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- TRAJECTION. n. f. [from trajectio, Lat.] 1. The act of darting through. Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the ether, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.
2. Emulsion. The trajection of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vii.
- TO TRAIL. v. a. [from trahere, Fr.] 1. To hunt by the track. 2. To draw along the ground. Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully: Trail your steel pikes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- Faintly he staggered through the hilling throng, And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along. Dryden.
3. To draw after in a long floating or waving body. What boots the regal circle on his head, That long behind he trails his pompous robe, And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe? Pope.
4. [From trahere, Dutch.] To draw; to drag. Because they shall not trail me through their streets Like a wild beast, I am content to go. Milton's Agonistes.
- Thrice happy poet, who may trail Thy house about thee like a snail; Or harness'd to a nag, at ease Take journeys in it like a chaise; Or in a boat, when'er thou wilt, Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. Swift.
- TO TRAIL. v. n. To be drawn out in length. When his brother saw the red blood trail Adown to fast, and all his armour steeped, For very felms load he 'gan to weep. Fairy Qu. b. ii.
- Since the flames purf'd the trailing smoke, He knew his boon was granted. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
- From o'er the roof the blaze began to move, And trailing vanish'd in d' Idean grove. It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide, Then in a steaming stench of sulphur dy'd. Dryden's En.
- TRAIL. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued; track followed by the hunter. See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakespeare.
- How cheerfully on the false trail they cry! Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shakespeare.
- I do think, or else this brain of mine Hunts not the trail of policy so sure As I have us'd to do, that I have found The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Any thing drawn to length. From thence the fuming trail began to spread, And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's En.
- When lightning shoots in glitt'ring trails along: It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night; But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe's Royal Convert.
3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations. And round about her work she did empale With a fair border wrought of sundry flows, Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser's Muirpothman.
- A sudden star it shot through liquid air, And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.
- TO TRAIN. v. a. [from trahere, Fr.] 1. To draw along. In hollow cube he train'd His devilish enginery. Milton.
2. To draw; to entice; to invite. If but twelve French Were there in arms, they would be as a call To train ten thousand English to their side. Shakespeare.

TRA

2. To draw by artifice or stratagem. For that cause I train'd thee to my house. Shakespeare.
- Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note! To drown me in thy filter's flood of tears. Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will doat: Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair, And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakespeare.
3. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise. We did train him on, And his corruption being ta'en from us, We as the spring of all shall pay for all. Shakespeare's H. IV.
4. To educate; to bring up; commonly with up. I can speak English. For I was train'd up in the English court. Shakespeare.
- A most rare speaker, To nature none more bound; his training such That he may furnish and instruct great teachers. Shakespeare.
- A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen. 2 Mac. iv. 9.
- Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and to fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.
- Spirits train'd up in fast and song. Milton.
- The first Christians were by great hardships trained up for glory. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To breed, or form to any thing. Abram armed his trained servants born in his house, and pursued. Gen. xiv. 14.
- The warrior horse here bred he's taught to train. Dryden.
- The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life; wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really are so. Locke.
- TRAIN. n. f. [from trahere, Fr.] 1. Artifice; stratagem of enticement. He cast by treaty and by trains Her to persuade. Fairy Queen, b. i.
- Their general did with due care provide, To save his men from ambush and from train. Fairfax.
- This mov'd the king, To lay to draw him in by any train. Daniel's Civil War.
- Swol'n with pride into the snare I fell Of fair fallacious looks, venerable trains, Soft'ned with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton's Agon.
- Now to my charms And to my wily trains! I shall ere long Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd About my mother Circe. Milton.
- The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.
2. The tail of a bird. Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.
- The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakevill.
- TH' other, whose gay train Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue Of rainbows and hazy eyes. Milton.
- Rivers now stream and draw their humid train. Milton.
- The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.
3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground. A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect! That promises more thousands: honour's train Is longer than his fore skirts. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
- Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.
4. A series; a consecution. Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.
- If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.
- They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.
- Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.
- What wouldst thou have me do? consider well The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.
- The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.
5. Process; method; state of procedure. If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all mens pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.
6. A retinue;

TRA

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worships of their names. Shakespeare.
Our fire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Thou should'st be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and ferv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton's Par. Lost.
Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn. Milton's Par. Lost.
He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.
The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.
He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those fins which are of its train. Smalridge.
7. An orderly company; a procession.
Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain? Dryden.
8. The line of powder reaching to the mine.
Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gun-powder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rable. Hadibras, p. iii.
Shall he that gives fire to the train pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine!
L'Estrange's Fables.
9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.
With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland. Clarendon, b. ii.
- TRAINBANDS*. n. f. [train and band]. I suppose for trained band. The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercise.
He directed the trainbands of Westminster and Middlesex, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend. Clarendon.
- Give commission
To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city. Dryden.
A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat: but before we could give the word, the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first. Addison's Freeholder.
- TRAINOIL*. n. f. [train and oil]. Oil drawn by coction from the fat of the whale.
- TRAINY*. adj. [from train]. Belonging to train oil. A bad word.
Here trains ascend.
- Where the huge hogheads sweat with trainy oil. Gay.
- TO TRAIPE*. v. a. [A low word, I believe, without any etymology.]. To walk in a careless or sluttish manner.
Two slipshod mules traipe along, Pope.
In lofty madness, meditating song.
- TRAIT*. n. f. [trait, Fr.]. A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.
By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this by their own folly. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
- TRAITOR*. n. f. [traitor, Fr. traditor, Lat.]. One who being trusted betrays.
The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treasons. Spenser on Ireland.
If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him. Bacon.
I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion and sell my country. Swift.
- TRAITORLY*. adj. [from traitor]. Treacherous; perfidious.
These traitorly rascals miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
- TRAITOROUS*. adj. [from traitor]. Treacherous; perfidious;
faithless.
What news with him, that trait'rous wight? Daniel.
Pontius knows not you,
While you stand out upon these trait'ous terms. B. Johnson.
The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted. Bacon.
More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects. Addison's Freeholder.
- TRAITOROUSLY*. adv. [from traitor]. In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.
Good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid
Next me, me traitorously hast betray'd;
And unsuspected half invisibly
At once fled into him, and stay'd with me. Donne.

TRA

- They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power. Clarendon.
- TRAITRESS*. n. f. [from traitor]. A woman who betrays.
I, what I am, by what I was, overcome:
Traitress, restore my beauty and my charms;
Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms. Dryden.
Nor did my traitress wife these eye-lids close,
Nor decently in death my limbs compose. Pope's Odyssey.
By the dire fury of a trait of wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope's Odyssey.
- TRALATI'IOUS*. adj. [from tralatius, Lat.]. Metaphorical; not literal.
- TRALATI'IOUSLY*. adv. [from tralati'ious]. Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.
Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; written language is tralati'iously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced. Holder's Elements of Speech.
- TO TRALI'NEATE*. v. n. [trans and line]. To deviate from any direction.
If you tralineate from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a bastard kind?
Do, as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son. Dryden.
- TRAMMEL*. n. f. [trammel, Fr. trama, tragula, Lat.].
1. A net in which birds or fish are caught.
The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the bunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking. Cureau.
2. Any kind of net.
Her golden locks she roundly did uptry
In braided trammels, that no looter hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears. Fairy Qu.
3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pace.
I may go shufflingly at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at canter, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
- TO TRAMMEL*. v. a. [from the noun]. To catch; to intercept.
If th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its furcaceous succeds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.
- TO TRANSACT*. v. a. [transactus, Lat.].
1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.
2. To perform; to do; to carry on.
It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.
- TRANSACTION*. n. f. [transactio, Fr. from transact]. Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management; affairs; things managed.
It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon, b. viii.
- TRANSANIMATION*. n. f. [trans and anima]. Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.
If the transanimation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose fire Satan entered. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.
- TO TRANSCEND*. v. a. [transcendere, Latin.].
1. To pass; to overpass.
It is a dangerous opinion to such popes, as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.
To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.
2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.
This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.
These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,
Since what they act transcends what they command. Denb.
High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she cou'd not, or she wou'd not find,
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.
3. To surmount; to rise above.
Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Hewel.
- TO TRANSCEND*. v. n. To climb. Not in use.
To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.
- TRANSCENDENCE*. n. f. [from transcend].
TRANSCENDENCY. n. f. [from transcend].
1. Excellence; unusual excellence; supereminence.
2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.
It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poetry, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon's Essays.
- TRANSCENDENT*. adj. [transcendens, Lat. transcendent, Fr.].
Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.
Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,
Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Cragshaw.
There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sanderfon.
If thou best he—But O! how fal'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light,
Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outline
Myriads, though bright. Milton.
Oh charming prince! Oh transcendent maid! A. Phillips.
The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions. Rogers's Sermons.
- TRANSCENDENTAL*. adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.].
1. General; pervading many particulars.
2. Supereminent; passing others.
Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii.
- TRANSCENDENTLY*. adv. [from transcend]. Excellently; supereminently.
The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South's Sermons.
- TO TRANSCOLATE*. v. a. [trans and colo, Latin.]. To strain through a sieve or colander.
The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.
- TO TRANSCRIBE*. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcribe, Fr.]. To copy; to write from an exemplar.
He was the original of all those inventions from which others did but transcribe the copies. Clarendon.
The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

TRA

- If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults;
we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.
- TRANSCRIBER*. n. f. [from transcribe]. A copier; one who writes from a copy.
A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.
- TRANSCRIPT*. n. f. [transcript, Fr. transcriptum, Latin.]. A copy; any thing written from an original.
The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.
The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South's Sermons.
- Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen
Of cities and of courts, of books and men,
And deign to let thy servant hold the pen.
Through ages thus I may presume to live,
And from the transcripts of thy prose receive What my own short-liv'd verse can never give. Prior.
- TRANSCRIPTION*. n. f. [transcription, Fr. from transcribere, Lat.]. The act of copying.
The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in their's: plagiary had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
- The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference. Brewster.
- TRANSCRIPTIVELY*. adv. [from transcript]. In manner of a copy.
Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other mens endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.
- TO TRANSCUR*. v. n. [transcurro, Lat.]. To run or rove to and fro.
By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not transcur and transcur. Bacon.
- TRANSCURSION*. n. f. [from transcurro, Lat.]. Ramble; pal-sage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.
In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcur throughout the whole. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I have briefly run over *transcur*sions, as if my pen had been posting with them. Watson's Life of Buckingham.
His philosophy gives them *transcur*sions beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis. Glanville's Secp.
I am to make often *transcur*sions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Hewel.
If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcur of comets.
More's Antidote against Atheism.
- TRANSE*. n. f. [trans, Fr. See TRANSE]. A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.
Abstract as in a trans, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.
- TRANSELEMENTATION*. n. f. [trans and element]. Change of one element into another.
Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy, nor Saint Peter's. Burton's Theory of the Earth.
- TRANSEXION*. n. f. [trans and sexus, Lat.]. Change from one sex to another.
It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transexionated persons were really men at first. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TO TRANSFER*. v. a. [transferre, Fr. transfere, Lat.].
1. To convey, or make over, from one to another.
He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Was't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right,
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.
The king,
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.
This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forget from whence that ease came, and transferred all the honour of it upon themselves. Asteron's Sermons.
Your sacred aid religious monarchs own,
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree
Transfer the power and set the people free.
By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

TRANSMUTE. v. a. [transmutare, Lat. transmutare, French.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose; to change. Obsolete.

When him lift the rascal routs appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmute,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all. Po. Queen.

TRANSMIGRANT. adj. [transmigrans, Lat.] Passing into another country or state.

Besides an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in parts, there are other implicit considerations, that of colonies or transmigrants towards their mother nation. Bacon's Holy War.

TRANSMIGRATE. v. n. [transmigro, Lat.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintain'd by generation; so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If Pythagoras's transmigration were true, that the souls of men transmigrating into species answering their former natures, some men must live over many serpents. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Their souls may transmigrate into each other. Howel.

Regard
The port of Luna, says our learned bard;
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his soul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll. Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION. n. f. [transmigration, Fr. from transmigrare.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either substance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another. Hosker, b. v.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species. Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Eating their passage hence, for intercourse
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead. Milton.

'Twas taught by wife Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass;
Seeing such transmigration there,
She thought it not a fable here. Denham.

When thou wert form'd, heav'n did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was fluffed in:
In woods and wilds thy monarchy maintain,
Where valiant beasts, by force and rapine, reign.
In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee. Dryden's Aureng.

TRANSMISSION. n. f. [transmissio, Fr. transmissus, Latin.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

If there were any such notable transmission of a colony hither out of Spain, the very chronicles of Spain would not have omitted to memorate a thing. Spenser on Ireland.

Operations by transmission of spirits is one of the highest secrets in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 236.

In the transmission of the sea-water into the pits, the water riseth; but in the transmission of the water through the vessels it falleth. Bacon.

These move swiftly, but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

The uvea has a muculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil, for the better moderating the transmission of light. Mor.

Languages of countries are lost by transmission of colonies of a different language. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

This enquiry will be of use, as a parallel discovery of the transmission of the English laws into Scotland. Hale.

Their reflexion or transmission depends on the constitution of the air and water behind the glais, and not the striking of the rays upon the parts of the glais. Newton's Opticks.

TRANSMISSION. adj. [transmissus, Lat.] Transmitted; derived from one to another.

And still the fire inculcates to his son
Transmissive lessons of the king's renown. Prior.

Itself a sun; it with transmissive light
Enlivens worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise Historick marbles to record his praise;
His praise eternal on the faithful stone,
Had with transmissive honour grac'd his son. Pope.

TRANSMITT. v. a. [transmittere, Lat. transmittere, Fr.] To send from one person or place to another.

By means of writing, former ages transmit the memorials of ancient times and things to posterity. Hale.

Thus flourish'd love, and beauty reign'd in state,
Till the proud Spaniard gave this glory's date:
Past is the gallantry, the fame remains,
Transmitted life in Dryden's lofty strains. Granville.

Shine forth, ye planets, with distinguish'd light;
Again transmit your friendly beams to earth,
As when Britannia joy'd for Anna's birth. Prior.

TRANSMITTAL. n. f. [transmissio, Lat.] The act of transmitting; transmutation.

Besides the transmittal to England of two-thirds of the revenues of Ireland, they make our country a receptacle for their supererogatory pretensions to offices. Swift.

TRANSMUTABLE. adj. [transmutabilis, Fr. from transmutare.] Capable of change; possible to be changed into another nature or substance.

It is no easy matter to demonstrate that air is so much as convertible into water; how transmutable it is unto itself may be of deeper doubt. Brown's Vulg. Err. b. iii.

The fluids and solids of an animal body are easily transmutable into one another. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TRANSMUTABLY. adv. [transmutabiliter, Fr.] With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTATION. n. f. [transmutation, Fr. transmutatio, from transmutare, Latin.] Change into another nature or substance. The great aim of alchemy is the transmutation of base metals into gold.

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a cardmaker, by transmutation a bear herder. Shakespeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another, is intermaginalia naturae, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible; but seeing there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out. Bacon.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before; as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, transmutation. Bacon.

The same land suffereth sundry transmutations of owners within one term. Bacon's Office of Alimination.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutations. Water, which is a very fluid tasteless salt, the changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, fusible stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and water returns into vapour by cold. Newton.

The supposed change of worms into flies is no real transmutation; but most of those members, which at last become visible to the eye, are existent at the beginning, artificially complicated together. Bentley's Sermons.

TRANSMUTE. v. n. [transmutare, Lat. transmutare, French.] To change from one nature or substance to another.

Suidas thinks, that by the golden fleece was meant a golden book of parchment which is of sheep-skin, and therefore called golden, because it was taught therein how other metals might be transmuted. Raleigh.

That metals may be transmuted one into another I am not satisfied of the fact. Ray on the Creation.

Patience for reign o'er transmuted ill, Van of his Wishes. Van of his Wishes.

TREADLE. n. f. [from tread.]
 1. A part of an engine on which the feet act to put it in motion.
 The farther the fore-end of the treadle reaches out beyond the fore-side of the lathe, the greater will the sweep of the fore-end of the treadle be, and consequently the more revolutions is made at one tread. Mason's Mech. Exerciser.
 2. The sperm of the cock.
 Whether it is not made out of the gamy, or treadle of the egg, seemeth of lesser doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 At each end of the egg is a treadle, formerly thought to be the cock's sperm. De Ham.
TREASON. n. f. [trahison, French.] An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth: it is divided into high treason and petit treason. High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed;
 as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent; or to destroy the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them; or to counterfeite the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench, or of the other; justices in Eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or impairing the current money: and, in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king: and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife her husband; secular or religious kills his prelate: this treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital.
 Man disobeying,
 Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
 Against the high supremacy of heaven. Milton.
 To expiate his treason hath nought left.
 He made the overture of thy treason to us. Shakespeare.
 Athaliah cried, treason, treason. Shakespeare's Macheath.
TREASONABLE. adj. [from treason.] Having the nature of TREASONOUS. adj. [from treason.] Guilty of treason. Treasonous is out of use.
 Him by proofs as clear as founts in July
 I know to be corrupt and treasonous. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
 Of treasonous malice. Shakespeare's Macheath.
 Most mens heads had been intoxicated with imaginations of plots, and treasonable practices. Clarendon.
 Were it a draught for fume when the banquets
 I wou'd not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.
 A credit to run ten millions in debt without parliamentary security is dangerous, illegal, and perhaps treasonable. Swift.
TREASURE.

TRE

TREASURE. n. f. [trezor, Fr. thesaurus, Latin.] Wealth hoarded; riches accumulated.
 An inventory, importing
 The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 They built treasure cities. Exod. i. 11.
 He used his laws as well for collecting of treasures, as for correcting of manners. Bacon.
 Gold is treasure as well as silver, because not decaying, and never sinking much in value. Locke.
TO TREASURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To hoard; to reposit; to lay up.
 After thy hardness and impenitent heart thou treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath. Rom. ii. 5.
 Practical principles are treasured up in man's mind, that, like the candle of the Lord in the heart of every man, discovers what he is to do, and what to avoid. South.
 No, my remembrance treasures honest thoughts,
 And holds not things like thee; I scorn thy friendship. Rowe.
 Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
 Since all things lost on earth are treasured there. Pope.
TREASURER. n. f. [from treasure; treasurer, Fr.] One who has care of money; one who has charge of treasure.
 This is my treasurer, let him speak.
 That I have reserv'd nothing, private affections in supreme rulers made their own fancies both their treasurers and hang-men, weighing in this balance good and evil. Raleigh.
TREASURERSHIP. n. f. [from treasurer.] Office or dignity of treasurer.
 He preferred a base fellow, who was a suitor for the treasur- ership, before the most worthy. Hakewill.
TREASUREHOUSE. n. f. [treasure and house.] Place where hoarded riches are kept.
 Let there be any grief or disease incident to the soul of men, for which there is not in this treasurehouse a present comfortable remedy to be found. Hooker, b. v.
 Thou silver treasurehouse,
 Tell me once more, what title dost thou bear? Shakespeare.
 Gather together into your spirit, and its treasurehouse, the memory, not only all the promises of God, but also the former senses of the divine favours. Taylor's holy living.
TREASURY. n. f. [from treasure; tresorerie, Fr.] A place in which riches are accumulated.
 And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
 As is the oozy bottom of the sea
 With sunken wreck and sumless treasuries. Shakespeare.
 Thy sumptuous buildings
 Have cost a mass of publick treasuries. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
 And yet I know not how conceit may rob
 The treasury of life, when life itself Yields to the theft. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 He had a purpose to furnish a fair case in that university with choice collections from all parts, like that famous treas- ury of knowledge at Oxford. Watson.
 The state of the treasury the king best knows. Temple.
 Physicians, by treasuries of just observations, grow to kill in the art of healing. Watts.
TO TREAT. v. a. [traiter, Fr. trahere, Lat.]
 1. To negotiate; to settle.
 To treat the peace, a hundred senators Shall be commissioned. Dryden's En.
 2. [Trates, Lat.] To discourse on.
 3. To use in any manner, good or bad.
 He treated his prisoner with great harshness. Spectator.
 Since living virtue is with envy curs'd,
 And the best men are treated like the worst;
 Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,
 And give each deed th' exact, intrinsic worth. Pope.
 4. To handle; to manage; to carry on.
 Zeuxis and Polygnotus treated their subjects in their pictures, as Homer did in his poetry. Dryden.
 5. To entertain with expense.
TO TREAT. v. n. [traiter, Fr. trahere, Saxon.]
 1. To discourse; to make discussions.
 Of love they treat till th' ev'ning star appear'd. Milton.
 Absence, what the poets call death in love, has given occasion to beautiful complaints in those authors who have treat- ed of this passion in verse. Addison's Spect.
 2. To practise negotiation.
 The king treated with them. 2 Mac. xiii. 22.
 3. To come to terms of accommodation.
 Inform us, will the emp'or treat? Swift.
 4. To make gratuitous entertainments.
TREAT. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. An entertainment given.
 This is the ceremony of my fate;
 A parting treat, and I'm to die in state. Dryden.
 He pretends a great concern for his country, and insight into matters: now such professions, when recommended by a treat, dispose an audience to hear reason. Collier.

TRE

What tender maid but must a victim fall?
 For one man's treat, but for another's ball? Pope.
 2. Something given at an entertainment.
 Dry figs and grapes, and wrinkled dates were set,
 In canisters t' enlarge the little treat. Dryden.
 The King of gods revolving in his mind
 Lycæon's guilt and his inhuman treat. Dryden.
TREATABLE. adj. [tratable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.
 A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment, rather to be taken than snatched away. Hooker.
 The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.
TREATISE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] Discourse; written tractate.
 The time has been my fell of hair
 Wou'd at a dismal treatise rouze, and stir
 As life were in't. Shakespeare.
 Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Duffenoy.
TREATMENT. n. f. [traitement, French.] Usage; manner of using good or bad.
 Scarce an humour or character which they have not used;
 all comes wafted to us: and were they to entertain this age,
 they could not now make such plenteous treatment. Dryden.
 Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.
TREATY. n. f. [traité, Fr.]
 1. Negotiation; act of treating.
 She began a treaty to procure;
 And stablish terms betwixt both their requests. Po. Qu.
 2. A compact of accommodation relating to publick affairs.
 A peace was concluded, being rather a bargain than a treaty. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Ection
 Let fall the guiltless weapon from his hand,
 And with the veil a peaceful treaty makes. Addison's Ovid.
 3. For entreaty: supplication; petition; solicitation.
 He cast by treaty and by trains
 Her to persuade. Spenser.
 I must
 To the young man send humble treaties, doze,
 And palter in the shift of lowneis. Shakespeare.
TREBLE. adj. [triples, Fr. triplex, Lat.]
 1. Threefold; triple.
 Some I see,
 That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry. Shakespeare.
 Who can
 His head's huge doors unlock, whose jaws with great
 And dreadful teeth in treble ranks are set. Sandys.
 All his malice serv'd but to bring forth
 Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shewn
 On man by him seduc'd; but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance pour'd. Milton.
 A lofty tow'r, and strong on ev'ry side
 With treble walls. Dryden's En.
 The pious Trojan then his jav'lin sent,
 The shield gave way; through treble plates it went
 Of solid brass. Dryden's En.
 2. Sharp of sound. A musical term.
 The sharper or quicker percussion of air causeth the more treble sound, and the lower or heavier the more base sound.
 Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 179.
TO TREBLE. v. a. [from the adjective; triplico, Lat. triplex, Fr.] To multiply by three; to make thrice as much.
 She conceiv'd, and trebling the due time,
 Brought forth this monstrous mass. Spenser.
 I would not be ambitious in my wish,
 To wish myself much better; yet for you,
 I would be trebled twenty times myself,
 A thousand times more fair. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.
 Aquarius shines with feeble rays,
 Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days. Cresch.
TO TREBLE. v. n. To become threefold.
 Whoever annually runs out, as the debt doubles and trebles upon him, so doth his inability to pay it. Swift.
TREBLE. n. f. A sharp sound.
 The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.
 The lute still trembles underneath thy nail:
 At thy well-sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
 The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.
TREBLENESS. n. f. [from treble.] The state of being treble.
 The just proportion of the air percussed towards the base-ness or trebleness of tones, is a great secret in sounds. Bacon.
TREBLE. adv. [from treble.] Thrice told; in threefold number or quantity.
 His jav'lin sent,
 The shield gave way; through treble plates it went
 Of solid brass, of linnen treble roll'd. Dryden's En.

TRE

The seed being so necessary for the maintenance of the several species, it is in some doubly and trebly defended. Ray.
TREE, n. f. trie, Islandick; tree, Danish.]
 1. A large vegetable rising, with one woody stem, to a considerable height.

Trees and shrubs, of our native growth in England, are distinguished by Ray. 1. Such as have their flowers disjointed and remote from the fruit; and these are, 1. Nuciferous ones; as, the walnut tree, the hazel-nut tree, the beech, the chestnut, and the common oak. 2. Coniferous ones; of this kind are the Scotch fir, male and female; the pine, the common alder tree, and the birch tree. 3. Bacciferous; as, the juniper and yew trees. 4. Lanigerous ones; as, the black, white, and trembling poplar, willows, and others of all kinds. 5. Such as bear their seeds, having an imperfect flower, in leafy membranes; as, the horse-bean. 6. Such as have their fruits and flowers contiguous; of these some are pomiferous; as, apples and pears; and some bacciferous; as, the forb or service tree, the white or hawthorn, the wild rose, sweet brier, currants, the great bilberry bush, honey-suckle, joy. Pruniferous ones, whose fruit is pretty large and soft, with a stone in the middle; as, the black-thorn or sloe tree, the black and white bullace tree, the black cherry, &c. Bacciferous ones; as, the strawberry tree in the west of Ireland, mistletoe, water elder, the dwarf, a large laurel, the viburnum or way-faring tree, the dog-berry tree, the sea black thorn, the berry-bearing elder, the privet barberry, common elder, the holy, the buckthorn, the berry-bearing heath, the bramble, and spindle tree or prickwood. Such as have their fruit dry when ripe; as, the bladder nut tree, the box tree, the common elm and ash, the maple, the gaul or sweet willow, common heath, broom, dyers wood, furze or gorse, the lime tree, &c. Miller.

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory
 With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root. Shak.
 It is pleasant to look upon a tree in Summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprang from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.
 Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth, spread into branches: thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.
 Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
 By trees of pedigree, or fame or merit;
 Though plodding heralds through each branch may trace Old captains and dictators of their race. Dryden.
TREE germaner, n. f. A plant.
TREE of life, n. f. [lignum vitæ, Latin.] An evergreen: the wood is esteemed by turners. Miller.
TREE pin inf. n. f. A plant.
TREEN, old plur. of tree.

Well run greenhood, got between
 Under the sand-bag he was seen;
 Loutling low like a forster green,
 He knows his tackle and his treen. Benj. Johnson.
TREEN, adj. Wooden; made of wood. Obsolete.
 Sir Thomas Rooketby, being controlled for first suffering himself to be served in treen cups, answered, these homely cups pay truly for that they contain: I had rather drink out of treen and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver and make wooden payments. Camden.

TREFOIL, n. f. [trifolium, Latin.] A plant.
 The trefoil hath a papilionaceous flower, consisting of the standard, the wings and keel coming out of the empalement together with the point covered with its fringed sheath: it becomes a capsule hidden in the empalement, and full of seeds shaped like a kidney, adhering close to the capsule when ripe: some have flowers consisting of one leaf, and filled with kidney-shaped seeds: to this must be added, that the leaves grow by threes, seldom by four or fives, on a common footstalk. Miller.

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child, standing upon tiptoes, and a trefoil, or three-leaved grass in her hand. Peachment on D'aving.
 Some few trefoil or rye-grass with their clover. Mortimer.
TRELLAGE, n. f. [French.]
 Trellage is a contexture of pales to support espalliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden. Trevoux.
 There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetiers, contrivers of bowers, grotto's, trellages, and cascades, are romance writers. Spectator, No. 477.

TRELLIS, n. f. [French.] Is a structure of iron, wood, or other, the parts crossing each other like a lattice. Trevoux.
TREMBLE, v. n. [trembler, Fr. tremo, Lat.]
 1. To shake as with fear or cold; to shiver; to quake; to shudder.

TRE

My compassionate heart
 Will not permit my eyes once to behold
 The thing, whereat it trembles by fumble. Shakespeare.
 God's name
 And power thou tremblest at. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 Shew your slaves how choleric you are,
 And make your bondmen tremble. Shakep. Julius Caesar.
 This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shakep. King Lear.
 They shall fear and tremble. Jer. xxxiii. 9.
 When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak.
 Frighted Turnus trembl'd as he spoke.
 He shook the sacred honours of his head,
 With terror trembl'd heav'n's bubbling bill,
 And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil. Dryden.
 Ye powers, revenge your violated altars,
 That they who with unhallow'd hands approach
 May tremble. Revue.

2. To quiver; to totter.
 Sinai's grey top shall tremble.
 We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry. Burset.
 3. To quaver; to shake as a sound.
 Winds make a noise unequally, and sometimes when vehement tremble at the height of their blast. Bacon.
TREMBLINGLY, adv. [from trembling.] So as to shake or quiver.

TREMBLINGLY the flood,
 And on the sudden drop. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Say what the life, were finer optics giv'n,
 Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
 To smart and agonize at every pore? Pope.
TREME'NDOUS, adj. [tremendus, Latin.] Dreadful; horrible; astonishingly terrible.
 There stands an altar where the priest celebrates some mysteries sacred and tremendous. Taiter, No. 57.
 In that portal shou'd the chief appear,
 Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear. Pope's Odyssey.

TREMOUR, n. f. [tremor, Lat.]
 1. The state of trembling.
 He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints, that when going his legs trembled under him. Harvey.
 By its typick and stimulating quality it affects the nerves, occasioning tremours. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.
 These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.
TREMULOUS, adj. [tremulus, Lat.]

1. Trembling; fearful.
 The tender tremulous christian is easily distracted and amazed by them. Decay of Piety.
 2. Quivering; vibratory.
 Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, imparts a swift tremulous motion in the lips, tongue or palate, which breath passing smooth does not. Hiller.

As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
 The lambent lightnings shoot across the sky. Thomson.
TREMULOUSNESS, n. f. [from tremulous.] The state of quivering.

TREN, n. f. A fish spear.
TRENCH, v. a. [trencher, Fr.]

1. To cut.
 Safe in a ditch he bides,
 With twenty trenched gathies on his head. Shakespeare.
 This weak impress of love is as a figure Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
 Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. Shakespeare.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.
 Pioneers with spades and pickaxe arm'd,
 Forerun the royal camp to trench a field. Milton.
 Trench the ground, and make it ready for the Spring. Evans.

First draw thy falchion, and on ev'ry side
 Trench the black earth a cubit long and wide. Pope.
 The trenching plough or coulter is useful in pasture-ground, to cut out the sides of trenches or drains. Mortimer.

1. A pit or ditch.
 On that coast build
 And with a trench enclose the fruitful field. Dryden's En.
 When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level. Mortimer's Hagb.
 2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp. The

TRE

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
 And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
 I saw our party to the trenches driven,
 And then I came away. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 William carries on the trench. Prior.
 Till both the town and castle yield.
TRE'CHANT, adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.
 He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
 With which he struck so furious and so fell,
 That nothing seem'd the puffance could withstand. F. 2.
 Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
 Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudibras.

TRE'CHER, n. f. [from trench; trencher, Fr.]
 1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.
 No more
 I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shakep. Tempest.
 My estate deserves an heir more rais'd,
 Than one which holds a trencher. Shak. Timon of Athens.
 When we find our dogs, we let the dish or trencher on the ground. Moré's Antidote against Atheism.
 Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
 Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryden.
 Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.

2. The table.
 How often hast thou,
 Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
 When I have feasted. Shakep. Henry VI.
 3. Food; pleasures of the table.
 It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their sumum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine. South's Sermons.

TRENCHERLY, n. f. [trencher and fly.] One that haunts tables; a parasite.
 He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencher-fies and spongers. Leffrange.

TRENCHERMAN, n. f. [trencher and man.] A feeder; an eater.
 Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skillfullest trenchermen of Media. Sidney.

You had musty victuals, and he hath hold to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakep. Much ado about nothing.
TRENCHERMATE, n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hooker, b. v.
TREND, v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
 To learn the natives names, their towns explore
 The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore. Dryden.
TRENTALS, n. f. [trente, Fr.]

Trentals or trigintals were a number of masses, to the tale of thirty, said on the same account, according to a certain order instituted by Saint Gregory. Ayliffe's Parergon.
TRENDLE, n. f. [trenbel, Saxon.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TREPA'N, n. f. [trepán, Fr.]
 1. An instrument by which surgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.
 2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great show of friendship, into Tropan, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
 How very active in his own trepán. Roscommon.
 Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and trepans. South's Sermons.

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion conflicts, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trepán upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South's Sermons.

TREPA'N, v. a. [from the noun; trepáner, Fr.]
 1. To perforate with the trepan.
 A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in *trepáner*ing the bone. Wise's Surgery.
 2. To catch; to ensnare. Arbutnot.

They trepán'd the state, and fix'd it down
 With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii.
 Those are but trepán'd who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermons.

TRE

TREP'HINE, n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.
 I shew'd a trepan and trep'hine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wise's Surgery.

TREPIDATION, n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]
 1. The state of trembling.
 The bow tortures the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 137.
 All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 793.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
 Men reckon what it did and meant;
 But trepidation of the spheres,
 Though greater far, is innocent. Dante.
 They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd,
 And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
 The trepidation talk'd, and that first-mov'd. Milton.

2. State of terror.
 Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Wotton.
 His first action of note was in the battle of Lepanto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Wotton.

TRE'PASS, v. n. [trepasser, Fr.]
 1. To transgress; to offend.
 If they shall confess their trespasss which they trepassed against me, I will remember my covenant. Lev. xxvi. 43.
 They not only contradict the general design and particular expresse of the gospel, but trepass against all logick. Norris.

2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.
 Their morals and economy,
 Most perfectly they made agree:
 Each virtue kept its proper bound,
 Nor trepass'd on the other's ground. Prior.

TRE'PASS, n. f. [trepass, Fr.]
 1. Transgression; offence.
 Your purpos'd low correction
 Is such, as baffle, and the meanest wretches
 For pil'lings, and most common trepasses
 Are punish'd with. Shakep. King Lear.
 The trepass money and sin money was the priests. 2 Kings.
 He shall bring his trepass offering for his sin. Lev. v. 6.
 Will God incense his ire
 For such a petty trepass? Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.
TRE'PASSER, n. f. [from trepass.]
 1. An offender; a transgressor.
 2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.
 If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trepasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me. Walton.

TRE'SSED, adj. [from treffe, French.] Knotted or curled.
 Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,
 But for the lad, whom long I lov'd so dear,
 Now loves a lass that all his love doth scorn,
 He plunged in pain his treffed locks doth tear. Spenser.

TRE'SSES, n. f. without a singular. [treffe, Fr. treccia, Italian.] A knot or curl of hair.

TREYABLE.

TRI

TRIABLE, adj. [from try.]
1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.
For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.
2. Such as may be judicially examined.
No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.
TRIAD, n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united.
TRIAL, n. f. [from try.]
1. Test; examination.
With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he flart,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakespeare.
2. Experience; act of examining by experience.
I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation. Shak.
Skillful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N^o. 520.
3. Experiment; experimental knowledge.
Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb.
4. Judicial examination.
Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself. Cowell.
He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial.
Than the severity of public power. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
5. Temptation; test of virtue.
Left our trial, when least fought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
No such company as then thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milton.
Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.
6. State of being tried.
Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love?
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare's As you like it.
TRIANGLE, n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.
The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.
TRIANGULAR, adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.
The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are. Fairy Qu.
Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey,
And most convenient for the bee; yet did the not chuse that,
Because then there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray on the Creation.
TRIBE, n. f. [tribu, Fr. tribus, Lat. from treu, b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words; treu from tir es, his lands, is supposed to be Celtic, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government; to prove which Mr. Rowland offers many reasons, which he mentions by imagining that centuria is derived from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred treus or tribes.]
1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.
I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.
If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the milled multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount. Milton.
Straggling mountaineers, for public good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.
I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.

The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. The commander of a Roman legion.
TRIBUNITIAL, adj. [tribunitius, Lat.] Suiing a tribune;
TRIBUNITIUS, adj. relating to a tribune.
Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitius manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.
Oh happy ages of our ancestors,
Beneath the kings and tribunitius powers
One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden's Juvenal.
TRIBUTARY, adj. [tributarius, Fr. tributarius, Lat.].
1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgement of submission to a master.
Thenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,
Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:
Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly sway'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
The two great empires of the world I know;
And since the earth none larger does afford,
This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.
Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.
2. Subject; subordinate.
These he, to grace his tributary gods,
By course commits to federal government,
And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns,
And wield their little tridents. Milton's Comus.
O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
Legions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill
Insult the matter's tributary will. Prior.
3. Paid in tribute.
Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays. Cromwell.
TRIBUTARY, n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgement of subjection.
All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee.
The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute, are not properly subjects but foreigners. Davies.
TRIBUTE, n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgement; subjection.

Yet are the men more loose than they!
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd
More sleek, more soft, and flacker limb'd. Benj. Johnson.

To blast the living, gave the dead their due,
And wreaths, herself had tainted, trimm'd anew. Tickell.

When workmen fit a piece into other work, they say they trim in a piece.

Each muse in Leo's golden days
Starts from her trance, and trim her wither'd bays. Pope.

5. To balance a vessel.

Sir Roger put his coachman to trim the boat. Speclator.

6. It has often trim emphatical.

He gave you all the duties of a man,
Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle. Shakespeare.

To TRIM. v. n. To balance; to fluctuate between two parties.

If such by trimming and time-serving, which are but two words for the same thing, betray the church by nauseating her pious orders, this will produce confusion. South's Sermon.

For men to pretend that their will obeys that law, while all besides their will serves the faction; what is this but a gross, fulsome juggling with their duty, and a kind of trimming it between God and the devil.

He who heard what ev'ry fool cou'd say,
Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

TRIM. n. f. Dress; gear; ornaments.

They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the five-ey'd maid of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them. Shakespeare.

Your labourer and dainty trim, wherein
You made great Juno angry. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

The goodly London in her gallant trim,
The phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old,
Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim,
And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRI'UMV. adv. [from trim.] Nicely; neatly.

Her yellow golden hair
Was trimly woven, and in tresses wrought. Fairy Queen.

The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Ascham.

TRI'UMMER. n. f. [from trim.] One who changes sides to balance parties; a turncoat.

The fame bat taken after by a weazel begged for mercy: no, says the weazel, no mercy to a mouse: well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and so the bat 'scaped in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange's Fab.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, Tories, trimmers. Swift.

2. A piece of wood inserted.

Before they pin up the frame of ground-plates, they must fit in the summer and the girders, and all the joints and the trimmers for the stair-case. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.

TRI'UMMING. n. f. [from trim.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgment without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming. Garth's Pref. to Ovid.

TRI'NAL. adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold.

Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high. Fa. Q. b. i.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To fit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.

TRI'NE. n. f. [trine, Fr. trinus, Latin.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

TRI'NITY. n. f. [trinitas, Lat. trinité, Fr.] The incomprehensible union of the three persons in the Godhead.

Touching the picture of the trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Peachment.

In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the trinity. Locke.

TRI'NET. n. f. [This trinet derives somewhat harshly from trinet, Fr. trichetto, Ital. a top-sail. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration.]

1. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets wherewith they are attired, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose. Sidney, b. ii.

We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all. Shakespeare.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,
Soon will you hear the fawcy steward say,
Pack up with all your trinkets and away. Dryden's Juc.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

How Johnny wheedl'd, threat'n'd, fawn'd,
Till Phyllis all her trinkets pawn'd. Swift.

What husbandlike husbands except they be foolers,
But handsom have storehouse for trinkets and tooles. Tuff.

Go with all your servants and trinkets about you. L'Estr.

TRI'OBOLAR. adj. [triobolari, Latin.] Vile; mean; worthless.

Turn your libel into verse, and then it may pass current amongst the balladmongers for a triobol ballad. Cheynel.

To TRIP. v. a. [treper, Fr. trippen, Dutch.]

1. To supplant; to throw by striking the feet from the ground by a sudden motion.

He conjunct Tripp'd me behind. Shakespeare.

Be you contented,
To have a son set your decrees at naught;
To trip the court of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person. Shakespeare.

2. To strike the feet from under the body.

I trip up thy heels and beat thee. Shakespeare.

The words of Hobbes's defence trip up the heels of his cause; I had once resolved. To resolve presupposeth deliberation, but what deliberation can there be of that which is inevitably determined by causes without ourselves. Bramhall.

3. To catch; to detect.

These women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

To TRIP. v. n.

1. To fall by losing the hold of the feet.

Virgil is so exact in every word, that none can be changed but for a worse: he pretends sometimes to trip, but it is to make you think him in danger when most secure. Dryden.

2. To fail; to err; to be deficient.

Saint Jerome, who pardons not over-easily his adversaries, if any where they chance to trip, preleth him as thereby making all sorts of men God's enemies. Hooker, b. v.

Many having used their utmost diligence to secure a retention of the things committed to the memory, cannot certainly know where it will trip and fail them. South.

Will shines in mixed company, making his real ignorance appear a seeming one: our club has caught him tripping, at which times they never spare him. Addison's Spect. N. 1051.

Several writers of uncommon erudition would expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment. Addison's Spect. N. 228.

3. To stumble; to titubate.

I may have the idea of a man's drinking till his tongue trips, yet not know that it is called drunkenness. Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade. Shakespeare.

The old saying is, the third pays for all; the triplex, fir, is a good tripping measure. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

He

TRI

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn dash Blends all together; then distinctly trips
From this to that; then quick returning skips
And snatches this again, and pauses there. Crahan.
On old Lycæus or Cyllene hoar,
Trip no more in twilight ranks,
Though Erymanth your ills deplore,
A better soil shall give you thanks. Milton's Arcades.
She bounded by, and tripp'd to light,
They had not time to take a steady flight. Dryden.
To the garden walk she took her way,
To sport and trip along in cool of day. Dryden.
Stay, nymph, he cry'd, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe. Dryden.
Well thou dost to hide from common fight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an errand came. Dryden.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot. Addison.
The lower plaits of the drapery in antique figures in sculpture
And painting, seem to have gathered the wind when the person is in a posture of tripping forward. Addison.
In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats. Prior.
They gave me instructions how to slide down and trip up the steepest slopes. Pope.
5. To take a short voyage.
TRIP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.
O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be;
When time hath fow'd a grizzel on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakespeare.
He tript for wrestling, smeared his limbs with oil,
And watches with a trip his foe to foil. Dryden's Georg.
It was a noble time when trips and Cornish hugs could make a man immortal. Addison on ancient Medals.
2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.
3. A failure; a mistake.
He saw his way, but in so swift a pace,
To chule the ground might be to lose the race:
They then, who of each trip th' advantage take,
Find but those faults which they want wit to make. Dryden.
4. A short voyage or journey.
I took a trip to London on the death of the queen. Pope.
TRIPARTITE. adj. [tripartite, Fr. tripartitus, Latin.] Divided into three parts; having three correspondent copies.

TRIPLE. adj. [triple, Fr. triplex, triplus, Lat.]
1. Threefold; consisting of three conjoined.
See in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's stool. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
O night and shades,
How are ye join'd with hell in triple knot,
Against th' unarmed weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless! Milton.
Thrice happy pair! so near ally'd
In royal blood and virtue too:
Now love has you together ty'd,
May none this triple knot undo. Waller.
By thy triple shape as thou art seen
In heav'n, earth, hell, grant this. Dryden.
Strong Alcides, after he had slain
The triple Geryon, drove from conquer'd Spain
His captive herds. Dryden's Æn.
Out bound'd the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.
2. Treble; three times repeated.
We have taken this as a moderate measure betwixt the highest and lowest; but if we had taken only a triple proportion, it would have been sufficient. Barnet.
If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more! If we had double or triple as many, there might still be the same suspicion for a greater number without end.
To TRIPLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

TRI

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and tripled prayers can express. Hooker, b. v.
If these halpience should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be tripled upon us. Swift.
2. To make threefold.
Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That e'en Cornelle might with envy see
Th' alliance of his triple unity. Dryden.
TRIPLET. n. f. [from triple.]
1. Three of a kind.
There fit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they swagger from their garrison;
Such a triplet could you tell
Where to find on this side hell. Swift.
2. Three verses rhyming together; as,
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march and energy divine. Pope.
Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my Hero on the foreign strand, Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new command. Prior.
I frequently make use of triplet rhymes, because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triplet a pin-darick. Dryden's Æn.
TRIPPLICATE. adj. [from triplex, Lat.] Made thrice as much.
Tripplicate ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other; which ought to be distinguished from triple. Harris.
All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or triplicate proportion one to another. Grew.
TRIPPLICATION. n. f. [from triplicate.] The act of trebling or adding three together.
Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that in the earthly, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or verticle circles, by triplication of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty. Glanville's Scip.
TRIPLET. n. f. [triplette, Fr. from triplex, Lat.] Trebleness; state of being threefold.
Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high. Fairy Qu. b. i.
It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender to meet. Bacon's Henry VII.
Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. Wat's Logic.

With two great talents of the gold. Dryden's Æn.
TRIPOLY. n. f. [I suppose from the place whence it is brought.]
A sharp cutting sand.
In polishing glass with sand, putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish.
Newton's Opticks.
TRIPPOS. n. f. A tripod. See TRIPPOD.
Welcome all that lead or follow,
To the oracle of Apollo;
Here he speaks out of his pottle,
Or the tripods, his tower bottle. Bonj. Johnson.
Craz'd fool, who would't be thought an oracle,
Come down from off the tripods, and speak plain. Dryden.
TRIPPER. n. f. [from trip.] One who trips.
TRIPPING. adj. [from trip.] Quick; nimble.
The clear fun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb; that stole With soft foot towards the deep. Milton's Par. Lost.
TRIPPING. n. f. [from trip.] Light dance.
Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes. Milton.

tion, but will not subsist in a violent fire. Brown.
TRITURATION. n. f. [trituration, Fr. triturare, Lat.] Reduction of any substances to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.
He affirmeth, that a pumice stone powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
TRIVET. n. f. [See TREVET.] Any thing supported by three feet.
The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally graceful; fair and young, and skill'd in house-wiferies.
Of all kind fitting; and withal a trivet, that enclos'd
Twenty-two measures. Chapman's Iliad.
The trivet table of a foot was lame,
A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,
Who thrills beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryden.
TRIVIAL. n. f. [trivialis, Fr. trivialis, Lat.]
1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.
Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of sense despise a trivial choice. Roscommon.
2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.
This argues confidence in your grace,
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial.
All circumstances well considered. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
See you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honour, fight. Dryden.
Were they only some slight and trivial indiscretions, to which the example of the world expos'd us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion. Rogers's Sermon.
In ev'ry work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due. Pope.
The ancient poets are like many modern ladies; let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance. Pope.
TRIVIALITY. adv. [from trivial.]
1. Commonly; vulgarly.
Money is not the finews of war, as is trivially said, where the finews of mens arms, in effeminate people, fail. Bacon.
2. Lightly; inconsiderably.
TRIVIALNESS. n. f. [from trivial.]
1. Commonness; vulgarly.
2. Lightness; unimportance.
TRUMP. n. f. [trumpus, Lat. triumphus, Fr.]
1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;
And there out off thy most ungracious head,
Which I will bear in triumph to the king. Shakespeare.
In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donatives upon disbanding the armies, were things able to enflame all mens courage. Bacon.
2. State of being victorious.
Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief. Milton.
Hercules, from Spain,
Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain. Dryden's Æn.

TRI

Packt cards with Castar, and false play'd my glory Unto an enemy's triumph. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
Each order bright
Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king. Milton.
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden-gate. Pope.
If fools admire, or whining coxcombs toast,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast. Logie.
4. Joy for success.
Great triumph and rejoicing was in heav'n. Milton.
5. A conquering card now called trump. See TRUMP.
TO TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Lat. triumpho, Fr.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.
1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.
The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Job xx. 5.
Your victory, alas, begets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears. Dryden.
2. To obtain victory.
This great commander fought many times to persuade So-lyman to forbear to use his forces any farther against the Christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians. Knox's Hist. of the Turks.
Then all this earthy grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time. Milton.
There fix thy faith and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides? Rouse.
While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breath. Prior.
3. To insult upon an advantage gained.
How ill beseming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull. Shakespeare.
Sorrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery. Shakespeare.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
Sole reigning, holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.
TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphalis, Fr. triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.
He left only triumphal garments to the general. Bacon.
Ye so near heav'n's door,
Triumphal with triumphal act have met. Milton.
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground. Pope.
Left we should for honour take
The drunken quarrel of a rake;
Or think it seated in a fear,
Or a proud triumphal car. Swift.
TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Lat. triumphal ornaments.]
A token of victory. Not in use.
He to his crew that sat consulting brought Joyless triumphals of his hop'd success. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

TROD. } participate passive of tread.
TRODDEN. }
 Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles. Luke xxi.
 Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long
 Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
 Or lightning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down Under his feet. Milton's Par. Reg. b. iv.
 Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
 And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Addison.
TROGLDYTE. n. f. [from τρογλοδιτης, Gr.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.
 Procure me a troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed. Arab. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
TO TROLL. v. a. [from trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Lat. a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.
 With the phant'ies of hey troll,
 Troll about the bridal bowl,
 And divide the broad-bread cake,
 Round about the bride's stake. Benj. Johnson's Underwoods.
TO TROLL. v. n. to run round.
 How pleasant on the banks of Styx,
 To troll in a coach and six. Swift.
 To troll for a pike with a rod which has a pulley towards the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.
 Nor drain I ponds the golden carp to take,
 Nor trouble for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake. Gay.

TRO

TROLOP. n. f. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly, loose woman.
TROLMYDAMES. n. f. [Of this word I know not the meaning.] A fellow I have known to go about with trolmymadams; I knew him once a servant of the prince. Shak. Winter's Tale.
TROOP. n. f. [from troupe, Fr. troupe, Italian; troupe, Dutch; troupe, Swedish; troupe, low Latin.]
 1. A company; a number of people collected together.
 That which should accompany old age,
 As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
 I must not look to have. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 Saw you not a blessed troop
 Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces
 Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun. Shakspere.
 As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army. Locke.
 2. A body of soldiers.
 Eneas seeks his absent foe,
 And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below. Dryden.
 3. A small body of cavalry.
TO TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To march in a body.
 I do not, as an enemy to peace,
 Troop in the throngs of military men,
 But rather shew a while like fearful war. Shakspere.
 They anon
 With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended. Milton's Par. Reg. b. i.
 Armies at the call of trumpet
 Troop to their standard. Milton's Par. Reg. b. vii.
 2. To march in haste.
 Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
 At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,
 Troop home to churchyards. Shakspere.
 The dry streets flow'd with men,
 That troop'd up to the king's capacious court. Chapman.
 3. To march in company.
 I do invest you jointly with my power,
 Preeminence, and all the large effects
 That troop with majesty. Shaksp. King Lear.
TROOPER. n. f. [from troop.] A horse soldier. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.
 Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent now than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion. Grew.
TROPE. n. f. [from τροπή, Gr. trope, Fr. trope, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds forest rain for forebode.
 For rhetoric he could not ope
 His mouth, but out there flew a trope. Hudibras.
 If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures.
TROPHED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.
 Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
 The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade. Pope.
TROPHY. n. f. [from trophaum, Gr. trophaum, Lat.] Something taken from an enemy, and shewn or treasured up in proof of victory.
 What trophy then shall I most fit devise,
 In which I may record the memory
 Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
 Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity? Spenser.
 To have borne
 His bruised helmet and his bended sword,
 Before him through the city, he forbids;
 Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent,
 Quite from himself to God. Shaksp. Henry V.
 There lie thy bones,
 Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb.
 Twice will I not review the morning's rite,
 Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,
 And split thy heart for wearing it. Shakspere.
 In ancient times the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanded of the armies, were things able to enflame all mens courage. Bacon's Essays.
 Around the posts hung helmets, darts, and spears,
 And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,
 And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars. Dry.
 The tomb with many arms and trophies grace.
 To shew posterity Elpenor was. Pope's Odyssey, b. xi.
TROPICAL. adj. [from trope.]
 1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.
 A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves. South's Sermons.

TRO

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South's Sermons.
 2. [from tropick.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.
 The pine apple is one of the tropical fruits. Salmon.
TROPICK. n. f. [from tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the North has the tropick of Cancer, and the South the tropick of Capricorn.
 Under the tropick is our language spoke,
 And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke. Waller.
 Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,
 Your men have been distress'd, your navy tost,
 Seven times the sun has either tropick view'd,
 The winter banish'd, and the Spring renew'd. Dryden.
TROPICICAL. n. f. [from tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat. and λογος, Gr.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.
TROPOLOGY. n. f. [from τροπος and λογος, Gr.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.
 Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities. Green's Vulgar Errors.
TROSSERS. n. f. [from trousser, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSER.
 You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hose off,
 And in your strait trossers. Shaksp. Henry V.
TO TROT. v. n. [from trotter, Fr. trotten, Dutch.]
 1. To move with a high jolting pace.
 Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart, to ride
 On a bay trotting horse, over four inch'd bridges, to course
 His own shadow for a traitor. Shaksp. King Lear.
 Whom doth time trot withal?
 —He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract
 Of her marriage and the day it is solemniz'd: if the interim
 Be but a sevennight time's pace, is so hard that it seems
 The length of seven years. Shaksp. As you like it.
 Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends. Dennis.
 2. To walk fast, in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.
TROT. n. f. [from trot, Fr. from the verb.]
 1. The jolting high pace of a horse.
 His homely is not
 So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind
 Can blow away, or glitt'ring look it blind:
 Who rides his fire and even trot,
 While the world now rides by, now lags behind. Herbert.
 Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
 That he could never die while he could move;
 So hung his destiny, never to rot
 While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milton.
 The virtuoso's saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.
 2. An old woman. In contempt. I know not whence derived.
 Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
 How now bold-face, cries an old trot a firrah, we eat our own hens, and what you eat you steal. LeStrange.
TROTH. n. f. [from trouth, old English; trēoth, Saxon.] Truth; faith; fidelity.
 Saint Withold met the night-mare,
 Bid her light and her troth plight. Shakspere.
 Stephen affails the realm, obtains the crown,
 Such tumults raising as torment them both:
 Th' afflicted state, divided in their troth
 And partial faith, most miserable grown, Endures the while. Daniel's Civil War.
 In troth, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,
 And teach the wily African deceit. Addison's Cato.
TROTHLESS. adj. [from troth.] Faithless; treacherous.
 Thrall to the faithless waves and trothless sky. Fairfax.
TROTHPLIGHT. adj. [from troth and plight.] Betrothed; affianced.
 This, your son in law,
 Is trothplight to your daughter. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
TO TROUBLE. v. a. [from trouble, Fr.]
 1. To disturb; to perplex.
 An hour before the worshipp'd sun
 Pear'd through the golden window of the East,
 A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shakspere.
 But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton.
 Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke on Education.
 2. To afflict; to grieve.
 It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney, b. ii.
 They pertinaciously maintain that afflictions are no real evils, and therefore a wife man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson's Sermons.

TRO

3. To distress; to make uneasy. Milton.
 Be not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton.
 He was fore troubled in mind, and much distressed. Mac.
 4. To busy; to engage overmuch. Milton.
 Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things.
 5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or flight regard.
 I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.
 6. To teize; to vex.
 The boy so troubles me;
 'Tis past enduring. Shakspere.
 7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.
 A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
 Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakspere.
 An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water;
 whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John vi. 4.
 God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton.
 Hear how she the ear employs;
 Their office is the troubled air to take. Davies.
 Seas are troubled when they do revoke
 Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.
 It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom that troubles and defiles the water. South.
 The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison's Guard. N. 99.
 Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
 And smooth the waves, or swell the trouble'd main. Dryden.
 8. To mind with anxiety.
 He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clar.
 9. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.
TROUBLE. n. f. [from trouble, French.]
 1. Disturbance; perplexity.
 They all his host derided, while they stood
 A while in trouble. Milton.
 2. Affliction; calamity.
 Double, double, toil and trouble,
 Fire burn and cauldron bubble. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.
 Take to thee from among the cherubim
 The choice of flaming warriors, left the fiend
 Some new trouble raise. Milton.
 4. Uneasiness; vexation.
 I have dream'd
 Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
 Knew never till this irksome night. Milton.
TROUBLE-STATE. n. f. [from trouble and state.] Disturber of a community; publick makebate.
 Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
 Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
 Must be cast forth. Daniel's Civil War.
TROUBLER. n. f. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.
 Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
 Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
 And vowed foe of my felicity. Fairy Qu. b. i.
 Heav'n's hurl down their indignation
 On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace! Shak.
 The best temper of minds desireth good name; and true honour; the lighter, popularity, and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-heretics. Bac.
 Spain,
 Whose chief support and sinews are of coin,
 Our nation's solid virtue did oppose
 To the rich troublers of the world's repose. Waller.
 The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.
TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]
 1. Full of molestation; vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.
 Heav'n knows
 By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
 I met this crown; and I myself know well
 How troublesome it sat upon my head:
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakspere.
 He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson's Sermons.
 Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterb.
 2. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.
 My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.
 3. Full of teizing business.
 All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.
 4. Slightly

TRO

4. Slightly harrassing.
They cas'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow. Shaksp. Henry IV.
5. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.
She of late is lightened of her womb.
That her to see should be but troublesome. Fa. Qu. b. i.
6. Importunate; teizing
Two or three troublesome old nurses, never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.
TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously;
wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.
Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication. Locke.
TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]
1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.
The lord treasurer, he complained of the troublesomeness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.
2. Importunity; unseasonableness.
TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.
He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the troubulous wind. Spenser.
Soon as they this mock king did espy,
Their troubulous strife they stinted by and by. Hubb. Tale.
No other noise, nor people's troubulous cries,
As still are wont t' annoy the walled town.
Might there be heard. Fairy Queen, b. i.
As a tall ship tossed in troubulous seas,
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Then, masters, look to see a troubulous world.
Only one supply
In four years troubulous and expensive reign. Daniel.
TROUVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Cowel.
TROUGH. n. f. [troog, trooh, Saxon; troch, Dutch; trou, Danish; traug, Islandick; trugo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.
The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wath, and makes his trough
In your embow'd bosoms. Shaksp. Rich. III.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes.
Where there is a good quick fall of rain water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 29.
Some logs, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns and boiled off. Add.
TO TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.] See TROLL.
1. To move volubly.
Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troul the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.
2. To utter volubly.
Let us be jocund. Will you troul the catch
You taught me while-ere. Shaksp. Henry IV.
TO TROUNCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trunc or trouzon, French, a club.] To punish by an indictment or information.
More probable, and like to hold
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which to many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts have been trounced. Hudibras.
If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
TROUSER. n. f. [trouss, Fr. trous, Eccl.] Breeches; hose.
TROUSERS. s. See TROUSERS.
The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trous on horseback. Spenser on Ireland.
The unlightness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trousse will do as much for the thigh. Wise's Surgery.
TROUT. n. f. [truh, Saxon; troita, truta, truita, Lat.]
A delicate spotted fish inhabiting brooks and quick streams.
The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain. Carver.

TRU

- Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where ev'ry trout can make as high rants
O'er his inferiours as our tyrants.
2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.
Here comes the trout that must be caught with fiddling.
TO TROW. v. n. [treodian, Saxon; trae, Danish.] To think;
to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used in ancient writers but in familiar language.
What handiworkness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.
Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meet that our ceremonies of Christian religion should be Popish than Turkish or Heathenish. Hooker, b. iv.
Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trowest. Shaksp. King Lear.
To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow. Shaksp. Go.
O useful day! useful indeed, I trow.
TROW. interj. [for I trow, or trow you.] An exclamation of enquiry.
Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more failing by the star.
—What means the fool, trow? Shaksp. King Lear.
TROUWEL. n. f. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]
A trouwel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Moss.
Fair prince, you have lost much good sport.
—Sport! of what colour?
—What colour, madam? how shall I answer you?
—As wit and fortune will.
—Or as the destinies decree.
—Well said, that was laid on with a trouwel. Shaksp. King Lear.
This was dextrous at his trouwel,
That was bred to kill a cow well. Swift.
TROY-WEIGHT. n. f. [from Troies, Fr.] A kind of weight TROY. } by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces;
ounce = 20 pennyweights; pennyweight = 24 grains.
The English physicians make use of troyweight after the following manner.
- | Grains | Scruple | Drachm | Ounce | Pound |
|--------|---------|--------|-------|-------|
| 20 | | | | |
| 60 | 3 | | | |
| 480 | 24 | 8 | | |
| 5760 | 288 | 96 | 12 | |
- The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdu-pois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbutnot.
TRUANT. n. f. [truand, Old Fr. treuant, Dutch, avagabond.]
An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.
For my part I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To cloath mine age with angel-like perfection,
Yet hath Sir Proteus made fair advantage of his days.
Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. Moss.
Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Dryden's Fenn.
TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.
What keeps you from Wertemberg?
—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shaksp. Hamlet.
He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he matter'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Where thou feed'st a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime, and take the traitor's head. Dryden.
TO TRUANT. v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, French;
truant, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty;
to loiter; to be lazy.
'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shaksp. Hamlet.
TRUANTSHIP. n. f. [truatie, Old Fr. from truant; truantise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.
The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truantship. Trus-

TRU

- TRU'TAIL. n. f. A short squat woman. Ainsworth.
TRUBS. n. f. [tuber, Lat.] A sort of herb. Ainsworth.
TRUCE. n. f. [truga, low Lat. trugus, Italian; truis, old Fr.]
1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.
Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker, b. v.
They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.
All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shaksp. Romeo.
This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers.
Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Tim. iii. 3.
Least the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt.
Shadwell till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence,
Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryd.
2. Cession; intermission; short quiet.
There he may find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Milton.
TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from truido, Lat.] The act of killing.
TO TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, Fr. truccare, Italian; tracar, Spanish; deduced by Salmasius from troqueo, to get money.] To traffic by exchange; to give one commodity for another.
TO TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.
The Indians truck gold for glances. L'Estrange.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son.
I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.
TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Exchange; traffic by exchange.
It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.
Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.
2. [from troque.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ainsworth.
TRUCKLEBED, or TRUNDLEBED. n. f. [properly trucklebed; from truckle, Latin, or troqueo.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.
There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
If he that is in battle slain,
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be said,
To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras, p. i.
TO TRUCKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.
Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us. Cleveland.
For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts and truckle'd. Hudibras.
Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange.
Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.
His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times;
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers:
Perhaps he might have truckle'd down,
Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.
They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions, a small trucking state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.
TRUCULENCE. n. f. [traculentia, Lat.]
1. Savageness of manners.

His trumpet, heard in Oreb since perhaps
When God descended, and perhaps once more
To found at gen'ral doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.
The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. Reformation.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that sound, as well as sense, persuades. Waller.
The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.
Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.

Thrown graceful round. Thomson.
 - TUFFED*. adj. [from tuff.] Growing in tufts or clusters.
There does a fable cloud
Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
And cast a gleam over this tuffed grove. Milton.
Towers and battlements it sees,
Bosom'd high in tuffed trees,
Where perhaps some beauty lies
The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.
Midst the desert fruitful fields arise,
That crown'd with tuffed trees and springing corn,
Like verdant isles the fable waste adorn. Pope.
 - TUFFY*. adj. [from tuff.] Adorned with tufts. A word of no authority.
Let me strip thee of thy tuffy coat,
Spread thy ambrosial stores. Thomson's Summer.
 - TUG*. v. a. [from tug, Saxon.]
1. To pull with strength long continued in the utmost exertion; to draw.
No more tug one another thus, nor maul yourselves, receive Prize equal; conquests crown ye both: the lifts to others leave. Chapman's Iliads.
These two massy pillars
With horrible confusion to and fro
He tug'd, he hook, till down they came, and drew
Upon the heads of all that sat beneath.
The whole roof after them, with bust of thunder. Milton.
Take pains the genuine meaning to explore,
There sweat, there strain, tug the laborious oar. Refo.
 2. To pull; to pluck.
Priest, beware thy beard;
I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Shak. Hen. VI.
There leaving him to his repose
Secured from the pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a song,
And a well tun'd theorbos hung
Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd, with a strain. Hudibras, p. i.
 - TO TUG*. v. n.
1. To pull; to draw.
The meaner sort will tug lustily at one oar. Sandys.
Lead your thoughts to the galleys, there those wretched captives are chained to the oars they tug at. Boyle.
There is such tugging and pulling this way and that way. More's Antidote against Atheism.
Thus galley-slaves tug willing at their oar,
Content to work in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all, if not constrained before. Dryden.
We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work; but if instead of that we slacken our arms, and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we set out. Addison on the State of War.
 2. To labour; to contend; to struggle.
Cast your good counsels
Upon his passion; let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
His face is black and full of blood,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tug'd for life. Shaksp. Hen. VI. p. ii.
They long wrestled and strenuously tugg'd for their liberty with a no less magnanimous than constant pertinacity. Bacon.
Go now with some daring drug Bait thy disease, and while they tug,
Thou to maintain the cruel strife,
Spend the dear treasure of thy life. Craford.

TUM

TUG. n. f. [from the verb.] Pull performed with the utmost effort.

Downward by the feet he drew

The trembling dastard: at the tug he falls.

Vast ruins come along, rent from the smoking walls. Dryd.

TUGGER. n. f. [from tug.] One that tugs or pulls hard.

TUTOR. n. f. [from tutor, Lat.] Guardianship; superintendent care; care of a guardian or tutor.

A folly for a man of wisdom, to put himself under the tuition of a beast.

They forcibly endeavour to cast the churches, under my care and tuition, into the moulds they have fashioned to their designs.

If government depends upon religion, this shews the pestilential design of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests, setting the latter wholly out of the tuition of the former.

When so much true life is put into them, freely talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tuition they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction.

TULIP. n. f. [tulipa, Fr. tulipa, Lat.] A flower.

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped somewhat like a pitcher; the point of the middle of the flower is surrounded with stamens, and afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, which opens into three parts, and is divided into three cells, full of plain seeds, resting upon one another in a double row. To these may be added a coated root, with fibres on the lower part. The properties of a good tulip, according to the characteristics of the best florists of the present age, are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point. 4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. praeoces, or early flowers; media's, or middling flowers; and serotines, or late flowers. The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Their roots should be taken up and spread upon mats in a shady place to dry; after which they should be cleared from their filth, and put up in a dry place until the season for planting.

The tulip opens with the rising, and shews with the setting sun.

Why tulips of one colour produce some of another, and running thro' all, still escape a blue. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TUMULT. n. f. [tumultus, Lat.] A confusion.

To TUMBLE. v. n. [tumber, Fr. tommeler, Dutch; tombolare, Italian.]

Of nature's germins tumble all together,

Answer me. Shakespeare.

2. To fall in great quantities tumultuously.

When riches come by the course of inheritance and testaments, they come tumbling upon a man. Bacon.

To stand or walk, to rise or tumble,

As matter and as motion jumble. Prior.

Sisyphus lifts his stone up the hill; which carried to the top, it immediately tumbles to the bottom. Addison's Spectator.

3. To roll about.

I saw at the bottom of one tree a gentleman bound with many garters hand and foot, so as well he might tumble and toils.

Gloster stumbled, and in falling struck me

Into the tumbling billows of the main. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

7. To play tricks by various vibrations of the body.

Reform our sense, and teach the men to obey;

They'll leave their tumbling, if you lead the way. Rowe.

To TUMBLE, v. a.

1. To turn over; to throw about by way of examination.

When it came to the ears of Maximilian, and tumbling it over and over in his thoughts, that he should at one blow be defeated of the marriage of his daughter and his own, he lost all patience.

A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new fermentation, which works them into a finer body.

They tumbled all their little quivers o'er,

To chafe propitious shafts. Prior.

2. To throw by chance or violence.

The mind often sets itself on work in search of some hidden ideas; though sometimes they are rouzed and tumbled out of their dark cells into open day-light by some turbulent passions.

Locke's Works.

3. To throw down.

Wilt thou still be hammering treachery,

To tumble down thy husband and thyself,

From top of honour to disgrace's feet? Shakespeare.

King Lycurgus, while he fought in vain,

His friend to free, was tumbled on the plain. Dryden.

If a greater force than his holds him fast, or tumbles him down, he is no longer free.

To TUMBLE, n. f. [from the verb.] A fall.

A country-fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree; why, says a passenger, I could have taught you a way to climb, and never hurt yourself with a fall.

To TUMBLER, n. f. [from tumble.] One who shews postures by various contortions of body, or feats of activity.

What strange agility and activeness do common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to by continual exercise?

Nic. bounced up with a spring equal to that of the nimblest tumblers or rope-dancers.

Never by tumbler thro' the hoops was shown,

Such skill in passing all, and touching none. Pope.

To TUMBLER, n. f. [tumber, Fr. tombereau, Freuch.] A dungcart.

Twifallow once ended, get tumbrel and man,

And compass that follow as soon as ye can. Taft. Hobb.

My corps is in a tumbrel laid, among

The filth and ordure, and inclos'd with dung;

That cart arreft, and raise a common cry,

For sacred hunger of my gold I die. Dryden.

What shall I do with this beastly tumbrel? go lie down and sleep, you fool.

To convince the present little race how unequal all their measures were to an antediluvian, in respect of the insects which now appear for men, he sometimes rode in an open tumbrel.

TUMFACTION. n. f. [tumefactio, Latin.] Swelling.

The common signs and effects of weak fibres, are paleness, a weak pulse, tumefactions in the whole body.

To TUMFY, v. a. [tumefacio, Lat.] To swell; to make to swell.

A fleshy excrescence, exceeding hard and tumid, supposed to demand extirpation.

To TUMID, adj. [tumidus, Lat.]

1. Swelling; puffed up.

2. Protuberant; raised above the level.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low

Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep,

Capacious bed of waters. Milton.

3. Pompous; boastful; puffy; falsely sublime.

Though such expressions may seem tumid and aspiring; yet cannot I scruple to use seeming hyperboles in mentioning felicities, which make the highest hyperboles but seeming ones. Boyle.

TUMOUR. n. f. [tumor, Latin.]

1. A morbid swelling.

Tumour is a disease, in which the parts recede from their natural state by an undue increase of their bigness. Wifeman.

Having dissected this swelling vice, and seen what it is that feeds the tumour, if the disease be founded in pride, the abating that is the most natural remedy.

2. Affected pomp; false magnificence; puffy grandeur; swelling mien; unsubstantial greatness.

His stile was rich of phrase, but seldom in bold metaphors; and so far from the tumour, that it rather wants a little elevation.

It is not the power of tumour and bold looks upon the passions of the multitude.

To TUMOROUS, adj. [from tumour.]

1. Swelling; protuberant.

Who ever saw any cypress or pine, small below and above, and tumorous in the middle, unless some diseased plant. Wotton.

2. Fastuous; vainly pompous; falsely magnificent.

According to their subject, these stiles vary; for that which is high and lofty, declaring excellent matter, becomes vast and tumorous, speaking of petty and inferior things. B. Jobb.

His limbs were rather sturdy than dainty, sublime and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures.

To TUMP, among gardeners, to fence trees about with earth.

To TUMULATE, v. n. [tumulo, Latin.] To swell. This seems to be the sense here, but I suspect the word to be wrong.

Urinous spirits, or volatile alkalies, are such enemies to acid, that as soon as they are put together, they tumulate and grow hot, and continue to fight till they have dissipated or mortified each other.

To TUMULOUS, adj. [tumulosus, Lat.] Full of hills.

The cause of the imagination that things turn round, is,
for that the spirits themselves turn, being compressed by the vapour of the wine; for every liquid body, upon compression, turneth, as we see in water: and it is all one to the light, whether the visual spirits move, or the object moveth, or the medium moveth. And we see that long turning round breedeth the same imagination.
2. To shew regard or anger, by directing the look towards any

Or take a turn for it at the session.
12. Convenience.
Diogenes' dish did never serve his master for more turns, notwithstanding that he made it his dish, cup, cap, measure,
and water-pot, than a mantle doth an Irishman.
They never found occasion for their turns,
But almost starv'd did much lament and mourn.
His going I could frame to serve my turn;
Save him from danger, do him love and honour.
My daughter Catharine is not for your turn.
To perform this murder was elect;
A base companion, few or none could miss,
Who first did serve their turn, and now serves his.
They tried their old friends of the city, who had served their turns so often, and let them to get a petition.
This philosophy may pass with the most sensual, while they pretend to be reasonable; but whenever they have a mind to be otherwise, to drink or to sleep, will serve the turn.
13. The form; cast; shape; manner.
Our young men take up some cry'd up English poet, without knowing wherein his thoughts are improper to his subject, or his expressions unworthy of his thoughts, or the turn of both is unharmonious.
Seldom any thing raises wonder in me, which does not give my thought a turn that makes my heart the better.
Female virtues are of a domestick turn. The family is the proper province for private women to shine in.
An agreeable turn appears in her sentiments upon the most ordinary affairs of life.

TUR

Wit doth not consist so much in advancing things new, as in giving things known an agreeable turn. Addison's Spect.
 Before I made this remark, I wondered to see the Roman poets, in their description of a beautiful man, so often mention the turn of his neck and arms. Addison.
 A young man of a sprightly turn in conversation, had an inordinate desire of appearing fashionable. Spektor.
 Books give the same turn to our thoughts and reasoning, that good company does to our conversation. Swift's Misc.
 The very turn of voice, the good pronunciation, and the alluring manner which some teachers have attained, will engage the attention. Watts.
 14. The manner of adjusting the words of a sentence. The turn of words, in which Ovid excels all poets, are sometimes a fault or sometimes a beauty, as they are used properly or improperly. Dryden.
 The three first stanzas are rendered word for word with the original, not only with the same elegance, but the same short turn of expression peculiar to the sapphic ode. Addison.
 The first coin being made of brass gave the denomination to money among the Romans, and the whole turn of their expressions is derived from it. Arbutnot.
 15. By Turns. One after another. They feel by turns the bitter change Of fierce extremes; extremes by change more fierce. Milt.
 The challenge to Dametas shall belong; Menalcas shall sustain his under-song; Each in his turn your tuneful numbers bring; By turns the tuneful muses love to sing. Dryden's Virg.
 By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord; Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd. Prior.
 TURNBENCH. n. f. [turn and bench.] A term of turners. Small work in metal is turn'd in an iron lathe called a turnbench, which they screw in a vice, and having fitted their work upon a small iron axle, with a drill barrel, fitted upon a square shank, at the end of the axle, next the left-hand, they with a drill-bow, and drill-string, carry it about. Moxon.
 TURNCOAT. n. f. [turn and coat.] One who forsakes his party or principles; a renegade; Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.
 Courtesy itself must turn to disdain, if you come in her presence—Then is courtesy a turncoat. Shaksp.
 TURNER. n. f. [from turn.] One whose trade is to turn in a lathe. Nor box, nor limes without their use are made, Smooth-grain'd and proper for the turner's trade. Dryden.
 Some turners, to shew their dexterity in turning, turn long and slender pieces of ivory, as small as an hay-stalk. Moxon.
 TURNING. v. a. [from turn.] Flexure; winding; meander. I ran with headlong haste Thro' paths and turnings often trod by day. Milton.
 TURNINGNESS. n. f. [from turning.] Quality of turning; tergiversation; subterfuge. So nature formed him, to all turnings of flights; that though no man had left goodness, no man could better find the places whence arguments might grow of goodness. Sidon.
 TURNIP. n. f. A white scutellous root. The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross; out of the flower cup rises the pointal, which afterward turns to a pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are full of roundish seeds: a carnosous and tuberous root. Milt.
 November is drawn with bunches of parsnips and turnips in his right-hand. Peachment on Drawing.
 The goddess rose amid the inmost round, With wither'd turnip-tops her temples crown'd. Gay.
 Turnips hide their swelling heads below. Gay's Post.
 TURNPIKE. n. f. [turn and pike, or pique.] 1. A cross of two bars armed with pikes at the end, and turning on a pin, fixed to hinder horses from entering. 2. Any gate by which the way is obstructed. The gates are shut, and the turnpikes locked. Arbutnot.
 TU'RSICK. adj. [turn and sick.] Vertiginous; giddy. If a man see another turn swiftly and long; or if he look upon wheels that turn, himself waxeth turnsick. Bacon.
 TURNSOL. n. f. [Heliotropium, Lat.] A plant. The flower consists of one leaf shaped like a funnel, having its centre wrinkled and folded, and its brim cut into ten segments alternately unequal: these flowers are collected into a long reflected spike, resembling a scorpion's tail; each flower is succeeded by four naked gibbous seeds. Miller.
 TU'RNSPIT. n. f. [turn and spit.] He that anciently turned a spit, instead of which jacks are now generally used. I give you joy of the report That he's to have a place at court; Yes, and a place he will grow rich in, A turnspit in the royal kitchen. Swift's Miscel.
 TU'RNSTILE. n. f. [turn and stile.] A turnpike. A turnstile is more certain Than, in events of war, dame Fortune. Hudibras.
 Twirling turnstiles interrupt the way, The thwarting passenger shall force them round. Gay.
 TU'RPENTINE. n. f. [terpentina, Italian; terebinthina, Lat.] The gum exuded by the pine, the juniper, and other trees of that kind. As the turpentine tree I stretched out my branches. Echaf.

TUT

 Vertgreaf grinded with turpentine, put into a pot, and as you use it warm it. Peachment on Drawing.
 TU'RQUOISE. n. f. See Turkoi. One shew'd me a ring, he had of your daughter for a monkey.—Out upon her! it was my turquoise, I had it when I was a bachelor. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
 TU'RPTUDE. n. f. [turpitude, Fr. turpido, from turpis, Lat.] Essential deformity of words, thoughts or actions; inherent vileness; badness. How would'st thou have paid My better service, when my turpitude Thou thus dost crown with gold. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 Decency imports a certain measure of one thing to another; the preservation of which is properly that rule by which every thing ought to act; and consequently the violation of it implies a turpitude or indecency. South's Sermons.
 TU'RRET. n. f. [turris, Lat.] A small eminence raised above the rest of the building; a little tower. Discourse I pry thee, on this turret's top. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 All things well ordered, he withdrew with speed Up to a turret high, two ports between, That so he might be near at every need, And overlook the lands and furrows green. Fairfax.
 Make Windsor hills in lofty numbers rise, And list her turrets nearer to the skies. Pope's Windsor Forest.
 TU'RRETTED. adj. [from turret.] Formed like a tower; rising like a tower. Take a turretted lamp of tin, in the form of a square; the height of the turret being thrice as much as the length of the lower part, whereupon the lamp standeth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 TURTLE. n. f. [turpelle, Saxon; tortorella, French; turtella, Italian; turtur, Latin.] 1. A species of dove. When shepherds pipe on oaten straws, And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks: When turtles tread. Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.

 Take me an heifer and a turtle dove. Gen. xv. 9.
 Galen propos'd the blood of turtles dropt warm from their wings. Watts.
 2. It is used among sailors and gluttons for a tortoise. TUSH. interj. [Of this word I can find no credible etymology.] An expression of contempt. Tush, say they, how should God perceive it: is there knowledge in the most high? Psalms lxviii.
 Sir Thomas Moor found fault with his lady's continual chiding, saying; the consideration of the time, for it was sent, should restrain her. Tush, tush, my lord, said she, look here is one step to heaven-ward, shewing him a friar's girdle. I fear me, quoth Sir Thomas, this one step will not bring you up a step higher. Camden's Remains.
 Tush never tell me, I take it much unkindly That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse, As if the strings were thine, should know of this. Shak. Othello.
 TUSK. n. f. [tyxar, Saxon; tusken, old Frisick.] The long teeth of a pugnacious animal; the fang; the holding tooth. Some creatures have over-long, or out-growing teeth, called fangs, or tusks; as boars and pikes. Bacon.
 The boar depended upon his tusks. L'Estrange.
 As two boars, With rising bristles, and with frothy jaws, Their adverse breasts with tusks oblique they wound. Dryden.
 A monstrous boar Whetting his tusks, and churning hideous foam. Smith.
 TU'SKED. adj. [from tusk.] furnished with tusks. Into the naked woods he goes, And seeks the tusky boar to tear. Dryden.
 Of those beasts no one was horned and tusked too: the superfluous blood not sufficing to feed both. Grew.
 TU'SSUCK. n. f. [diminutive of tuzz.] A tuft of grass or twigs. The first is remarkable for the several tufts or bunches of thorns, wherewith it is armed round. Grew.
 TUT. interj. [This seems to be the same with tush.] A particle noting contempt. Tut, tut! grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle. Shak. Twelfth Night.
 Tut, tut! here's a mannerly forbearance. Shaksp.
 TUTANAG. n. f. Tutanage is the Chinese name for spelter, which we erroneously apply to the metal of which canisters are made, that are brought over with the tea from China. It being a coarse pewter made with the lead carried from England and tin got in the kingdom of Quintang. Woodward.
 TUTELAGE. n. f. [tutella, tutelage, Fr. tutela, Lat.] Guardianship; state of being under guardian. If one in the possession of lands die, and leave a minor to succeed to him, his tutelage belongeth to the king. Drummond.
 He accompanied the ambassage with an article in the nature of a request, that the French king might, according unto his right right of feignory or tutelage; dispose of the marriage of the young duchess of Britany. Bacon.

 TUTELAR. adj. [tutela, Lat.] Having the charge or guardianship of any person or thing; protecting; defensive; guardian. According to the traditions of the magicians the tutelary spirits, will not remove at common appellations, but at the proper names of things, whereunto they are protectors. Brown.
 Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, that gives indolence of body, with an equality of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age; the precept of reason, as well as religion, and physician of the soul as well as the body; the tutelary goddess of health, and universal medicine of life. Temple.
 These tutelary genii who presided over the several people committed to their charge, were watchful over them. Dryden.
 But you, O Grecian chiefs, reward my care, Sure I may plead a little to your grace: Enter'd the town; I then unbar'd the gates, When I remov'd the tutelary fates. Dryden.
 Ye tutelary gods who guard this royal fabric, Rowe. Tutor. n. f. [tutor, Lat. tuteur, Fr.] One who has the care of another's learning and morals; a teacher or instructor. When I am as I have been, Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast, The tutor and the feeder of my riots; Till then I banish thee on pain of death. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 Ah, tutor, look where bloody Clifford comes. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 When nobles are the tailors tutors; No heretics burnt but wenches suiters. Butler.
 A primitive Christian, that coming to a friend to teach him a psalm, began, I said I will look to my ways, that I offend not with my tongue; upon which he stop'd his tutor, saying, this is enough if I learn it. Government of the Tongue.
 His body thus adorn'd, he next design'd With liberal arts to cultivate his mind: He sought a tutor of his own accord, And study'd lessons he before abhor'd. Dryden.
 No science is so speedily learned by the noblest genius without a tutor. Watts.
 TO TUTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To instruct; to teach; to document. This boy is foret born, And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments Of many desperate studies by his uncle. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 He cannot be a perfect man, Not being tried and tutor'd in the world. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 The cock has his spurs, and he strikes his feet inward with singular strength and order; yet he does not this by any syllogistical method, but is merely tutor'd by instinct. Hale.
 2. To treat with superiority or severity. I hardly yet have learn'd T'insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee: Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me To this submission. Shaksp. Rich. II.
 I take a review of my little boys mounted upon hobby-horses, and of little girls tutoring their babies. Addison.
 TUTORAGE. n. f. [from tutor.] The authority or solemnity of a tutor. Children care not for the company of their parents or tutors, and men will care less for theirs, who would make them children by usurping a tutorage. Govern. of the Tongue.
 TU'TORESS. n. f. [from tutor.] Directress; instructress; governess. Fidelity shall be your tutress. Moore's Foundling.
 TUTTY. n. f. [tutia, low Lat. tutbie, Fr.] A sublimate of zinc or calamine collected in the furnace. Ainslie.

The twentieth from the firing the capitol,
As fatal too to Rome, by all predictions. Bent. Johnson.
The quantity of the fifteenth should be turned to a twentieth.
Bacon.
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long reftive race of droning kings? Dryden.
This crown now must be raised, and coined one twentieth lighter; which is nothing but changing the denomination, calling that a crown now, which yesterday was but a part,
viz. nineteen twentieths. Locke.
TWENTY. adj. [twenzig, Saxon.]
1. Twice ten.
At least nineteen in twenty of these perplexing words might be changed into easy ones. Swift.

and twiddled it in, first one side, then the other. Wifeman.
TWIG. n. f. [twiz, twizza, Saxon; twigs, Dutch.] A small shoot of a branch; a twitch tough and long.
The Britons had boats made of willow twigs, covered on the outside with hides, and so had the Venetians. Raleigh.
They chose the fig-tree, such as spread her arms,
Branching to broad and long, that in the ground
The bended twigs take root. Milton.
Canst thou with a weak angle strike the whale,
His huge jaw with a twig or bulrush bore? Sandys.
If they cut the twigs at evenings, a plentiful and pleasant juice comes out.
The tender twig shoots upwards to the skies. Dryden.
From parent bough
A cyon meetly fever: after force
A way into the crabstocks close wrought grain
By wedges, and within the living wound
Inclose the softer twigs, around which spread
The binding clay. Philips.
TWIGGEN. adj. [from twig.] Made of twigs.
I'll beat the knave with a twiggen bottle. Shakespeare.
The hides and rim sewed together after the manner of twiggen work. Grew.

TWILIGHT. n. f. [twelicht, Dutch; zpeonleohz, Saxon.]

TWI

The dubious or faint light before sunrise, and after sunset;
obscure light; uncertain view.
Her twilight were more clear than our mid-day. Donne.
Suspicions amongst thoughts, are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.
A faint weak love of virtue, and of good,
Reflects from her on them, which understood
Her worth; and though she have shut in all day
The twilight of her memory doth stay. Donne.
He that saw hell in's melancholy dream,
And in the twilight of his phancy's theme Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd prophete. Cleveland.
Ambrosial night, with clouds exhal'd
From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd
To grateful twilight. Milton's Par. Lgh.
When the fun was down
They just arriv'd by twilight at a town. Dryden.
In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to our state of mediocrity. Locke.
TWILIGHT. adj.
1. Not clearly or brightly illuminated; obscure; deeply shaded.
When the fun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me goddess bring
To arched walks of twilight groves,
O'er the twilight groves, and dusky caves,
Long-founding isles, and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy fits, and round her throws
A death-like silence, and a dead repose. Pope.
2. Seen by twilight.
On old Lycæus or Cyllene hear
Trip no more in twilight ranks. Milton.
TWIN. n. f. [twinn, Saxon; tweligen, Dutch.]
1. Children born at a birth. It is therefore seldom used in the singular; though sometimes it is used for one of twins.
In this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Swift.
In bestowing
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning Ipswich and Oxford. Shakespeare.
If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, tho' together born, have strange and contrary fortunes. Drummond.
The divided dam
Runs to the fountains of her hungry lamb;
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first. Cleveland.
They came twins from the womb, and still they live.
As if they would go twins too to the grave. Onody.
Fair Leda's twins, in time to stars decreed,
One fought on foot, one curb'd the fiery steed. Dryden.
Had there been the same likeness in all men, as sometimes in twins, it would have given occasion to confusion. Grew.
2. Gemini, the sign of the zodiac.
This, when the fun retires,
First shines, and spreads black night with feeble fires,
Then parts the twins and crab. Crech.
When now no more, th' alternate twins are fir'd,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.
To TWIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

By original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells, Twin'd, and from her hath no individual being. Milton.
3. To unite itself.
Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Crawford.

TWI

To TWINE. v. n.
1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.
Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,
The victor cry'd, the glorious prize is mine! Pope.
2. To unite by interposition of parts.
Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
On a diffension of a doir, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.
3. To wind; to make flexures.
As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline.
Or as philosophers who find
Some fav'rite system to their mind,
In ev'ry point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit.
The deer rattles thro' the twining brake. Thomson.
TWINE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A twisted thread.
Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft filken twine.
A pointed sword hung threat'ning o'er his head,
Sustain'd but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.
2. Twist; convolution.
Nor all the gods beside Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine.
Welcome joy and feast,
Braid your locks with rosy twine,
Dropping odours, dropping wine. Milton.
3. Embrace; act of convolving itself round.
Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy bears, but with am'rous twine Clasps the tall elm. Philips.
To TWINGE. v. a. [twingen, German; twinge, Danish.]
1. To torment with sudden and short pain.
The great charg'd into the nostrils of the lion, and there twing'd him till he made him tear himself, and so master'd him. L'Estrange.
2. To pinch; to tweak.
When a man is past his sense,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twinging him by th' ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.
TWINGE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Short sudden sharp pain.
The wickedness of this old villain startles me, and gives me a twinge for my own sin, though far short of his. Dryden.
2. A tweak; a pinch.
How can you fawn upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears. L'Estrange.
TWINK. n. f. [See TWINKLE.] The motion of an eye;
a moment. Not in use.
She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied so fast, protesting oath on oath,
That in a twink the won me to her love. Shakespeare.
To TWINKLE. v. n. [twincian, Saxon.]
1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.
At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial fun. Shakespeare.
As plays the fun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakespeare.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Parfay.
God comprises all the goods we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.
The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.
Think you your new French profelytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home,
Your benefices twinkl'd from afar. Dryden.
So weak your charms, that like a winter's night,
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.
These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.
2. To open and shut the eye by turns.
The owl fell a mooring and twinkling. L'Estrange.
3. To play irregularly.
His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As tho' he beck'ned, and call'd back his soul. Donne.
TWINKLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sparkling intermitted light; a motion of the eye.

TWI

Suddenly, with twink of her eye.
The damsel broke his misintended dart. Spenser.
I come, I come; the least twinkle had brought me to thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.
Money can thy wants at will supply,
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee meet.
It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Fairy Queen.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.
The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once. Dryden.
TWINLING. n. f. [diminutive of twin.] A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth. Tusser's Husb.
Twinnings increase bring. Tusser's Husb.
TWINNER. n. f. [from twin.] A breeder of twins.
Ewes yearly by twinning rich masters do make.
The lambs of such twimmers for breeders go take. Tusser.
To TWIRL. v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick rotation.
Wool and raw silk by moisture incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little wreatings, as appeareth by the twirling and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.
Dextrous damfels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.
Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel. Dodds.
TWIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Rotation; circular motion.
2. Twist; convolution.
The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being an heterotropha, the twirl turning from the right-hand to the left. Woodward on Fossils.
To TWIST. v. a. [twypan, Saxon; twisten, Dutch.]
1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.
Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twist'd from her womb,
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.
To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twist'd on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.
Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty,
And should we both in this condition,
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition,
Else these two passions by the way,
May chance to shew us scurvy play. Prior.
The task were harder to secure my own
Against the pow'r of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttleton.
2. To contort; to writh. Pope.
Either double it into a pyramidal, or twist it into a ser-
3. To wreathe; to wind; to encircle by something round about.
There are pillars of smoke twist'd about with wreaths of flame. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To form; to weave.
If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: was't not to this end
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Shakespeare.
5. To unite by intertexture of parts.
All that know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that joy, which so early kilt Thy youthful temples, with what horror we Think on the blind events of war. Waller.
6. To unite; to intimate.
When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church; when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Decay of Piety.
To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.
In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circumvolution or inflection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword:
Th'Inachians view the slain with vast surprize,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.
TWIST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.
Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining others laid. Addison.

T W I

2. A single string of a cord.
Winding a thin string about the work, hazards its breaking by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Maxon's Mech. Exerc.
3. A cord; a string.
Through these labyrinths, not my grovelling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.
About his chin the twist Dryden.
He ty'd, and soon the strang'd fowl dismiss'd.
4. Contortion; writhing.
Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.
5. The manner of twisting.
Jack thrunk at first light of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Arbutnot.
Twister. n. f. [from twist.] One who twists; a ropemaker.
To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.
When a twister a-twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist, he three times doth intwine;
But if one of the twines of the twist do untwine,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwisting the twine that untwisteth between,
He twines with his twister, the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twine the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twines were intwined, he now doth untwine,
'Twixt the twain intertwining a twine more between,
He, twining his twister, makes a twist of the twine. Wallis.
To twist. v. a. [esp. twist, Saxon.] To finer; to flout; to reproach.
When approaching the stormy flowers,
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,
And sooth to false, nought seemeth like strife,
That shepherds to twisten each other's life. Spenser.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twists me with my falsehood to my friend. Shakespeare.
Æsop minds men of their errors without twisting them for what's amiss. L'Estrange.
This these scoffers twisted the Christians with. Tillotson.
Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twisted in his own time. Baker.
To twit. v. a. [epicurean, Saxon.] To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.
He rose, and twit'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new. Milton.
Twit'd by the sleeve he mouths it more and more. Dryden's Juvenal.
With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at ev'ry step a twitching spright behind. Dryd.
Thrice they twit'd the diamond in her ear. Pope.
Twit. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.
But Hudibras give him a twit,
As quick as lightning in the breach. Hudibras.
The lion gave one hearty twit, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind. L'Estrange.
2. A painful contraction of the fibres.
Other confederate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twit produce,
Which gently pithes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackmore.
Mighty physical their fear is,
For soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart descending to their breeches,
Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.
A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches. Sharp.
*Twit*grass. n. f. A plant.
*Twit*grass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground. Mortimer.

Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye Shakespeare.
For ever knit.
I have no tye upon you to be true,
But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you. Dryden.
Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not. Adams's Cato.
It ought not to be sported with;
Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.
*Ty*ger. n. f. See Tiger.

The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A *ty*mal's found were better than any voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.
Type. n. f. [See like.] Type in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog, and from thence perhaps comes league.
Bale *ty*e, call't thou me host? now,
By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakespeare.
Tympanites. n. f. [τυμπανίτης, from τυμπανον, to sound like a drum.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.
Tympanum. n. f. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.
The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing. Weyman.
Tympany. n. f. [from τυμπανος, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum.
Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and at-temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hamm.
He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany,
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.
Others that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.
Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast. L'Estrange.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou't but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. A. butnot.
Tyn. adj. Small.
He that has a little tyn wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shakespeare.

Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd feed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance. Milton.
The Apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson's Sermons.
3. A stamp; a mark not in use.
Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shakespeare.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discovered, that can do me good?
—I had advancement of your children, gentle lady,
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads;
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shakespeare.
4. A printing letter.
Typick. n. f. [typicus, Fr. typicus, Lat.] Emblematical;
Typical. adj. figurative of something else.
The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian;
which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Atterbury.
Hence that many courfers ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory shew
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.

will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.
Then gan Caraculus tyrannise anew,
And gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And to Alectus treacherously flew,
And took on him the robe of Emperor. Fairy Queen.
I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shakespeare.
A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.
Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise'd without a guard. Waller.
He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is to command assent by its own authority. Locke's Works.
Tyrannous. adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick;
arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.
It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.
Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold an usurper. Spenser.
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakespeare.

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life. Shakespeare.
After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Temple.
Tyranny. n. f. [tyrannis, Latin; τυραννία; tyrannie, Fr.]
1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in th' excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.

TYR

1. The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.
 2. Unrefracted and cruel power. Boundless intemperance. In nature is a tyranny; it hath been Th'untimely emptying of the happy throne, And fall of many kings. Shakespeare.
 3. Cruel government; rigorous command. Bleed, bleed, poor country! Great tyranny lay thou thy basis sure, For goodness dares not check thee. Shakespeare. Suspicions dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy. Bacon. God in judgment just, Subjects him from without to violent lords; Who oft as undeservedly intral His outward freedom; tyranny must be. Milton.
 4. Severity; rigour; inclemency. The tyranny o' the open night's too rough For nature to endure. Shakespeare's King Lear.
- TYRANT. n. f. [tyrannos; tyrannus, Latin.] Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhan-ner, Welch, to share, q. d. tirbanner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

TYR

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.
 2. A cruel despotick and severe master; an oppressor. Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney, b. i. I would not be the villain that thou think'st, For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp, And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth. Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds! Shakespeare, Cymb. The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton. Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious! South's Sermons. Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dryden. When tyrant custom had not shackl'd man, But free to follow nature was the mode. Thomson.
- TYRE. n. f. [Properly tire.] See TIRE.
- I have seen her beset and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about the tyre of her head. Hakewill on Providence.
- TYRO. n. f. [Properly tiro, as in the Latin.] One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments. There stands a structure on a rising hill, Where tyro's take their freedom out to kill. Garth's Disp.

U.

VAC

V.

Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obscure; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obscure.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacuity.

How is't

That thus you bend your eye on vacancy, And with th'incorporal air do hold discourse? Sh. Hamlet.

2. Chasm; space unfill'd.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea. Watts's Logic.

3. [Vacancy, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unfill'd.

In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summon'd to parliament in the bishop's room. Ayliffe.

4. [Vacancies, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet, Those little vacancies from toil are sweet. Dryd. St. of In.

The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time. Watts.

5. Littlefness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous. Walton.

VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Latin.]

1. Empty; unfill'd; void.

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it. Boyle's Works.

2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world. More's Divine Dialogues.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasinesses, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good. Locke.

3. Not fill'd by an incumbent, or possessor.

Left the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.

Others when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take the victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp. Spenser.

Sir John Berkeley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable. Clarendon.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chains of thought, by ideas of what is past. Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave, Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind, Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distrefsful bread. Shakef.

Some vain amusement of a vacant soul. Irene.

To VACATE. v. a. [vacat, Latin.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

V.

VAG

That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies. K. Charles.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession of.

3. To defeat; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge;

For while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part

To fawn, and yet betray. Dryden.

VACATION. n. f. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Latin.]

1. Intermision of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Cowel.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon Off. of Alienat.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary in every christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond's Fundamentals.

VACCARY. n. f. [vacca, Latin.] a cow-house; a cow-pasture.

VACILLANCY. n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Lat. vacillant, Fr.]

A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. More's Divine Dialogues.

VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Darham.

VACUITY. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACUATION. n. f. [vacuatio, Latin.] The act of emptying. Diét.

VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; State of being unfill'd.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfill'd; space unoccupied.

In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond's Fund.

He, that seat soon failing, meets

A vast vacuity. Milton.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should intirely possess our heart. Rogers.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glanv.

VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuus, Fr.] Empty; unfill'd.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinitude: nor vacuum the space. Milton's Par. Lost.

VACUUM. n. f. [Latin.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will show us some good practical lessons. Watts.

To VADE. v. n. [vado, Latin.] To vanish; to pass away. Spenser.

A word useful in poetry, but not received.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,

That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;

Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,

And at whose touch the hills in smoke shall vade. Watson.

VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Latin. vagabond, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

V A I

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I wou'd not buy
 Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakes. Cor.
 A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe's Parergon.
 2. Wandering; vagrant.
 This common body,
 Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
 Goes to, and back, lacquing the varying tide. Shakes.
 Their prayers by envious winds
 Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.
VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adj.]
 1. A vagrant; a wanderer, commonly, in a sense of reproach.
 We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling-place. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Reduced, like Hannibal, to seek relief
 From court to court, and wander up and down
 A vagabond in Africa. Addison's Cato.
 2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.
Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.
VAGARY. n. f. [from vagus, Latin.] A wild freak; a capricious frolic.
 They chang'd their minds,
 Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
 As they wou'd dance. Milton's Par. Lost. b. vi. l. 613.
 Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with, than without your knowledge? Lake on Education, § 97.
VAGABONDNESS. n. f. [vagina and perma, Latin.] Sheathing; having the wings covered with hard scales.
VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vagus, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.

VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.
VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.
 Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. More's Divine Dialogues.
 Take good heed what men will think and say;
 That beauteous Emma vagrant courtes took,
 Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.
 Her lips no living bard, I weat,
 May say how red, how round, how sweet;
 Old Homer only could indite
 Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
 They stand recorded in his book,
 When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.
VAGRANT. n. f. [vagant, Fr.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.
Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
 Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.
 You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
 Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.
 To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use. F. Atterbury.
 Ye vagrants of the sky,
 To right or left, unheeded, take your way. Pope.
VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Latin.]
 1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.
 Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight. Hayward.
 2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.
 The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and things, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.
VAIL. n. f. [voile, French.] This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin; and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.
 1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.
 While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisdom.
 2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.
 3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural.
 See VALE.
 To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.
 To VAIL. v. a. [avaller le bonet, French.]
 1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.
 They flidly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by cavaliers.
 The virgin 'gan her beavoir vail,
 And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.
 2. To let fall in token of respect.
 Certain of the Turks gallics, which would not vail their top-falls, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Knolles's Hist.
 They had not the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Add.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.
 That furious Scot,
 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
 Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare.
 To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.
 Thy convenience must vail to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.
VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Latin.]
 1. Fruitless; ineffectual.
 Let no man speak again
 To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakespeare.
Vain is the force of man,
 To crush the pillars which the pile sustains. Dryden.
 2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.
 Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
 Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
 And vain chimera, vomits empty flame. Dryden's En.
 Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
 And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.
 3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things.
 No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estran.
 He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
 Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.
 The minstrels play'd on ev'ry tide,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.
 To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride.
Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud, thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.
 Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
 To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.
 View this marble, and be vain no more. Pope.
 4. Shewy; ostentatious.
 Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.
 5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.
 Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
 Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
 Or happiness. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
 That all the actions of our life were vain,
 Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.
 To your vain answer will you have recourse,
 And tell 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.
 6. False; not true.
 7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.
 He tempts in vain.

 An hundred shepherds woned.
 Met in the vale of Arde. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
 Anchises, in a flow'ry vale,
 Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.
 2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell. If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
 Since our knights and senators account
 To what their fordid, begging vails amount;
 Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
 Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.
 His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds. Swift.
VALEDICTION. n. f. [valedictio, Lat.] A farewell. Donne.

- Who on their plumed vans receiv'd him soft
 From his uneasy station, and upbore,
 As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton.
 His disabled wing unfurled:
 He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
 His vans no longer could his flight sustain.
 The vans are broad on one side, and narrower on the other;
 both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derb.
VANCOUVER. n. f. [avantcourier, French.] A harbinger; a precursor.
VANE. n. f. [vaene, Dutch.] A plate hung on a pin to turn with the wind.

VANITY. n. f. [vanitas, Lat. vanité, Fr.]
 1. Emptiness; uncertainty; inanity.
 2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.
 Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come.
 Thy pride,
 And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
 Rejected my forewarning. Milton.
 3. Trifling labour.
 To use long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judg'd a vanity in the answerer, not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 4. Falshood; untruth.
 Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Wallingham. Sir J. Davin.
 5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle shew; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.
 Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service. Hooker.
 I must
 Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
 Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare's Temp.
 Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
 Makes her free will slave to vanity. Davies.
 Sin, with vanity, had fill'd the works of men.
 The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress;
 and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.
 Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,
 That all her vanities at once are dead;
 Succeeding vanities the still regards,
 And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.
 6. Ostentation; arrogance.
 The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.
 Whether it were out of the same vanity, which possess'd all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Arcopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

VAP

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating on small occasions.
 Can you add guilt to vanity, and take A pride to hear the conquests which you make. Dryden.
 'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
 That vanity's the food of fools;
 Yet now and then your men of wit
 Will condescend to take a bit. Swift's Miscel.
 To VAN. v. a. [from vannus, Lat. vanner, Fr.] To fan; to winnow. Not in use.
 The corn, which in vanning lieth lowest is the best. Bacon.
 To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, French.]
 1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.
 Wert not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
 The fearful French, whom you late vanquish'd,
 Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakespeare.
 They subdued and vanquish'd the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon, b. viii.
 The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose:
 But you have done what Cato could not do,
 To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.
 2. To confute.
 This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.

 2. Windy; flatulent.
 If the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endangereth the child to become lunatick. Bacon.
 Some more subtle corporeal element, may so equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous moisture, as to form it into round drops. More's Antidote against Atheism.
 The food which is most vaporous and perishable, is the most easily digested. Arbutnot.
 A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood. Cheyne.
VAPOUR. n. f. [vapeur, Fr. vapor, Latin.]
 1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.
 Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot. Milton.
 When first the fun too pow'ful beams displays,
 It draws up vapours which obscure its rays:

VAR

- But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
 Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.
 2. Wind; flatulence.
 In the Thessalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination: for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.
 3. Fume; steam.
 The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.
 In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapor which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapor from the candle to the still. Newton's Optics.
 For the imposthume, the vapor of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper. Arbutnot on Diet.
 4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.

 The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.
 Swift running waters vapour not so much as standing waters. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N^o. 767.
 2. To bully; to brag;
 Not true, quoth he? How'er you vapour,
 I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.
 These are all the mighty powers
 You vainly boast, to cry down ours;
 And what in real value's wanting,
 Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.
 That I might not be vapour'd down by insignificant testimonies, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville's Pref. to Scap.
 Be you to us but kind;
 Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
 No sorrow we shall find. E. Do-let's Song.
 To VAPOUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter in fumes or vapour.
 Break off this last lamenting kiss,
 Which sucks two souls, and vapours both away. Donne.
 He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,
 Another sighing vapor forth his soul,
 A third to melt himself in tears. B. Johnson.
 Opium loseth some of his poisonous quality, if vapoured out, and mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.
 It must be helped by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be restored, or vapoured away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.
VARIABLE. adj. [variable, Fr. variabilis, Latin.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.

 His open stores,
 Though vast, were little to his ampler heart. Thomson.
 2. Viciously great; enormously extensive or capacious.
 The vicious language is vast, and gaping, swelling, and irregular; when it contends to be high, full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Johnson.
 They view'd the vast unmeasurable abyss.
 Others with vast Typhoean rage more fell,
 Rend up rocks. Milton.
VAST. n. f. [vastum, Latin.] An empty waste.
 They shook hands, as over a vast; and embrac'd, as from the ends of oppos'd winds. Shakespeare.
 Through the vast of heav'n it founded.
 The wat'ry vast,
 Secure of storms, your royal brother past. Pope.
VASTATION. n. f. [vastatio, from vasto, Latin.] Waste; depopulation.
 This wild-fire made the saddest vastations, in the many fatal outrages which these eager contentions occasion. Decey of Piety.
VASTIDITY. n. f. [vastitas, Lat. from vastus.] Wideness; immensity. A barbarous word.
 Perpetual durance,
 Through all the world's vastidity. Shakespeare.
VASTLY. adv. [vastus, Latin.] Greatly; to a great degree.
 Holland's resolving upon its own defence, without our share in the war, would leave us to enjoy the trade of the world, and thereby grow vastly both in strength and treasures. Temple.
 It is vastly the concern of government, and of themselves too, whether they be morally good or bad. South.
VASTNESS. n. f. [vastus, Latin.] Immensity; enormous greatness.
 Behemoth, biggest born of earth, upheav'd
 His vastness. Milton's Par. Lost.
 She by the rocks compell'd to stay behind,
 Is by the vastness of her bulk confin'd. Waller.
 When I compare this little performance with the vastness of my subject, methinks I have brought but a cockle-shell of water from the ocean. Clanville.
 Ariosto observed not moderation in the vastness of his draught. Dryden.
 Hence we may discover the cause of the vastness of the ocean. Bentley's Sermons.
VASTY. adj. [vastus, Latin.] Large; enormously great.
 I can call spirits from the vasty deep. Shakespeare.
VAT. n. f. [vat, Dutch, vat, Saxon.] A vessel in which liquors are kept in the immature state.
 Plumpy Bacchus, with pink cyne,
 In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakespeare.
 Let him produce his vats and tubs in opposition to heaps of arms and standards. Addison.

VAUDEVIL. n. f. [vaudeville, Fr.] A song common among the vulgar, and sung about the streets, Trev. A ballad; a trivial strain.

VAULT. n. f. [vaulte, Fr. volta, Ital. voluta, low Latin.]
1. A continued arch.
O, you are men of stone:
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack. Shakef. K. Lear.
The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosaic abys, which was included within this vault: and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abys. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A cellar.
Creep into the kill-hole.
He will seek there; neither press, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of. Shakef.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shakef.
Whether your fruitful fancy lies
To banish rats that haunt our vault. Swift.
3. A cave; a cavern.
The silent vaults of death, unknown to light,
And hell itself, lie naked to his sight. Sandys.
4. A repository for the dead.
Shall I not be stilled in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in. Shakef.
To VAULT. v. a. [vouter, Fr. from the noun.]
To arch; to shape of a vault.
Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twin'd stones
Upon th' humbl'd beach? Shakef. Cymbeline.
2. To cover with an arch.
Over-head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And flying vaulted either host with fire. Milton.
To VAULT. v. n. [vollige, Fr. volligare, Italian.]
1. To leap; to jump.
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other. Shakef. Macbeth.
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore. Sh.
He is vaulting variable ramps
In your despite, upon your purse. Shakef.
If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakef.
Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree. Dryden.
If a man shou'd leap a garret, or vault down the monument, wou'd he leave the memory of a hero behind him? Collier on Duelling.
Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth. Addison.
2. To play the tumbler, or posture-master.
VAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.
VAULTAGE. n. f. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.
He'll call you to hot an answer for it,
Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakef. Hen. V.
VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.
Restore the lock! the cries, and all around Restore the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound. Pope.
VAULTER. n. f. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper; a tumbler.
VAULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.
I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakef.
I'll say that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heav'ns so high above our heads. Shakef.
VAUNMURE. n. f. [avant mur, Fr.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.
With another engine named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread, two vaunmures.
This warlike captain, daily attempting the vaunmures, in the end by force obtained the fame; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in, who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vaunmure. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
To VAUNT. v. a. [vanter, Fr.] To boast; to display with ostentation.
Not that great champion
Whom famous poets verse so much doth vaunt;
And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many furies and sharp hits did haunt. Fairy Queen.

UDD

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most,
In skillful knitting of soft filken twine. Spenser.
My vanquisher spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton.
To VAUNT. v. n.
1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.
You say, you are a better soldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true. Shakef.
The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace. Wisd. xvii. 7.
So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milton.
Pride which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has. Gov. of Tongue.
2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaults.
'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart. Dryden.
VAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.
Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counsels. Spenser.
Him I seduc'd with other promises and other vaunts. Milton.
Such vaunts who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all. Granville.
VAUNT. n. f. [from avant, Fr.] The first part. Not used.
Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firrings. Shakef.
VAUNTER. n. f. [vauteur, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.
Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.
Tongue-vallant hero, vaunter of thy might;
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight. Dryden.
VAUNTEUL. adj. [from vaunt and full.] Boastful; ostentatious.
Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,
Young Clarion, with vauntful lustre, Spenser.
After his guide did cast abroad to fare. Spenser.
VAUNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully; ostentatiously.
Heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Glo'ster's death. Shakef.
VAWARD. n. f. [van and ward.] Fore part Since we have the vaward of the day,
My love shall hear the music of my hounds. Shakef.
Marcuis,
Their hands I'd vaward are the Antiates
Of their best trust. Shakef. Coriolanus.
He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the vaward. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
UBERTY. n. f. [ubertas, Latin.] Abundance; fruitfulness.
UBICATION. n. f. [from ubi, Latin.] Local relation; where-ness. A scholastic term.
Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross. Glavin.
UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Latin.] Existing every where.
For wealth and an ubiquitous commerce, none can exceed her. Hen.
UBIQUITARY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] One that exists every where.
How far wide is Aquinas, which faith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcass of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitous. Hall.
UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.
In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.
Pern the light,
A solemn wight,
As you should meet,
In any street,
In that ubiquity. B. Johnson.
Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet. South.
UDDER. n. f. [ubet, Saxon; udder, Dutch. uber, Lat.] The breast or dug of a cow, or other large animal.
A honnests, with udders all drawn dry,
Lay couching head on ground. Shakef.
Sithence the cow
Produc'd an ampler store of milk; the she-goat,
Not without pain, dragg'd her diffident udder. Prior.
UDDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.
Marian toft could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.

VEG

VEAL. n. f. [veal, a calf, veeler, veffer, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.
Would'st thou with mighty beef augment thy meal?
Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.
Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal. Gay.
VECTION. n. f. [vectio, vectio, Latin.] The act of carrying.
VECTIVATION. n. f. [vectivatio, Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.
Enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots; a species of vectivation seldom used amongst the antients. Arbutnot.
VECTURE. [veitura, Latin.] Carriage.
Three things one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture and the vecture or carriage. Bacon's Essays.
To VEER. v. n. [vire, French.] To turn about.
If a wild uncertainty prevail,
And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
You lose the fruit of all your former care,
For the sad prospect of a just despair. Roscommon.
Nigh rivers mouth, where wind
Veers oft, as oft he fleers and shifts her fail. Milton.
I have no taste of the noisy praise
Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of swoll'n success; but veering with its ebb.
A-head the master pilot fleers Dryden.
And as he leads, the following navy veers.
It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.
To VEER. v. a.
1. To let out.
As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all fail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. B. Johnson.
2. To turn; to change.
I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Veer the main-sheet, and bear up with the land. Spenser.
Sailing farther, it veers its lilly to the west, and regardeth that quarter, wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.
VEGETABILITY. n. f. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.
The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it into a lapidaceous substance. Brown.
VEGETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, school Lat. vegetabile, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.
Vegetables are organized bodies consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in their nourishment from without, usually by means of a root, by which they are fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill's Materia Medica.
Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think. Waller.
In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on. Locke.
Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.
VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]
1. Belonging to a plant.
The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prior.
Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal. Arbutnot on Aliments.
The well shower'd earth
Is deep enrich'd with vegetable life. Thomson.
2. Having the nature of plants.
Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton's Par. Lost.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.
Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.
As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.
See dying vegetables life sustain;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope's Essay on Man.
VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Latin.]
1. The power of producing the growth of plants.
The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The fun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, lets the steaming power
At large. Thomson's Spring.
Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.
2. The power of growth without sensation.
Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility.
These pulsations I attribute to a plastick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.
VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetativus, Fr. from vegetate.]
1. Having the quality of growing without life.
Creatures vegetative and growing, have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.
Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties, and virtues of the field. Brown's Notes on Odyss.
VEGETATIVENESS. n. f. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.
VEGETE. adj. [vigetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; spritely.
The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.
The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.
VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering stalks of his vegetive life. Tuff. Husbandry.
VEGETIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.
Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in th' unfinished part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryden.
VEHEMENCE. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
VEHEMENCY. n. f. [vehementia, Latin.]
1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.
2. Ardour; mental violence; terrour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: sift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker's Pref.
The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakef. Hen. VIII.
Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy?
The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.
This pure cause would kindle my rap'd spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things wou'd be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.
He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compals than two months. This vehemency of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.
Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison's Cato.
VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Latin.]
1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.
2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakef.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such,
As us'd or not, works in the mind no change,
Nor vehement desire. Milton's Par. Lost.
VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]
1. Forcibly.
The christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly than any religion did before. Tillotson.
VEHICLE. n. f. [vehiculum, Latin.]
1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprize. Addison's Guardian.
2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.
That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle by another, is a popular tenent. Brown.
3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

VEI

The gaiety of a diverting word, serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estrange.
To VEIL. v. n. [veils, Lat. See VAIL.]

1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd. Milton.
It became the Jewish fashion when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover; to invest.
I decry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host. Milton.

3. To hide; to conceal.
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shews, half veil the deep intent. Pope's Dunciad.

VEIL. n. f. [velum, Latin.]

1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Fairy Queen.
The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrow'd veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wifful Acton. Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dry.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN. n. f. [veine, Fr. vena, Latin.]

The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincy.

When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shakspeare.

Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.

Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale, Down to the veins of earth. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let the gla'ss of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton's Opticks.

3. Course of metal in the mine.

There is a vein for the silver. Job xxviii. 1.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of. Swift's Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.

We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.

Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Wotton's Architecture.

VEL

6. Humour; temper.

I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me. Shakspeare. Rich. III.

I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakspeare. Rich. III.

Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others.

They among themselves in pleasant vein Stood scoffing. Milton's Par. Lost.

Speak't thou in earnest or in jesting vein?
The currier struck the urser upon the right vein. Dryden.

7. Continued disposition.

The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, have cost me this present service. Temple.

8. Current; continued production.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

9. Strain; quality.

Now somewhat sing, whose endless fountenance
Among the shepherds may aye remain;
Whether these list, thy loved lass advance,
Or honour Pan with higher hymns of praise. Spenser.

10. Streak; variegation, as the veins of the marble.

VEINED. adj. [veineux, Fr. from vein.]

1. Full of veins.

2. Streaked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thomson.

VELLITTY. n. f. [vellite, Fr. vellit, from velle, Latin.]

Vellity is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it;
but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect vellity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. Locke.

To VELLICATE. v. a. [vellit, Latin.] To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense. Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellitating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous. Arbutnot.

VELLICATION. n. f. [vellitatio, Lat.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purgers have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind. Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication imparted upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

VELLUM. n. f. [vellin, Fr. vellum, Latin; rather vellum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum. Wifeman.

VELOCTY. n. f. [velocit, Fr. velocitas, Latin.] Speed; swiftness;
quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities;
they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbola's or parabola's, or in ellipses very eccentric. Bentley's Sermon.

VELVET. n. f. [veluto, Ital. villus, Latin. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts. Locke.

VELVET. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish. Shakspeare. Taming of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find. Shakspeare.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then being alone Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakspeare.

To VELVET. v. n. To paint velvet.

Verdure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Peacham on Drawing.

VELVET. n. f. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word.

His horse with one girth fix times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velvet, pieced with packthread. Shakspeare.

VENAL.

VEN

VENAL. adj. [vena, Fr. venalis, Latin.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verb be thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
This, from no venal or ungrateful muse. Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word.

It is uncreasable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses. Roy.

VENALITY. n. f. [venalite, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness;
prostitution.

VENATICK. adj. [venaticus, Latin.] Used in hunting.

VENATION. n. f. [venatio, Latin.] The act or practice of

The manner of their venation we shall find to be other-ways than by sawing away of trees. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To VEND. v. a. [vendre, Fr. vendo, Lat.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend, and make use of, lay by him. Boyle.

VENDER. n. f. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendee cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson. Ayliffe.

VENDOR. n. f. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the vendors seat themselves. Graunt.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the vendors of card-matches. Addison.

VENDIBLE. adj. [vendibilis, Latin.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable.

In a neat tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. Shakspeare.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandize, riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities. Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a de-terminate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies. Boyle.

VENDIBLENES. n. f. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VENDITATION. n. f. [venditatio, from vendit, Latin.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all readings, and venditation of their own nature, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author. B. Johnson.

VENDITION. n. f. [venditio, Fr. vendition, Latin.] Sale; the act of selling.

To VENER. v. a. [among cabinet-makers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of

VENERICE. n. f. [veneficium, Latin.] The practice of poisoning.

VENERICIAL. adj. [from veneficium, Latin.] Acting by poison;
bewitching.

The magical virtues of misletoe, and conceived efficacy into venefical intentions, seemeth a Pagan relique derived from the ancient Druides. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENERFICIOUSLY. adv. [from veneficium, Latin.] By poison or wheherast.

Left witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they broke the shell. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENEMOUS. adj. [from venin, Fr.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venemous beast hang on his band. Acts xxviii. 4.

To VENENATE. v. a. [veneno, Latin.] To poison; to infect with poison.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic, as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, whereby the venenate parts are carried off. Woodward on Feffils.

VENENATION. n. f. [from venenare.] Poison; venom.

This venenation shoots from the eye; and this way a bati-stik may impossibly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VENESE. adj. [veneneus, Fr. from venenum, Latin.] Poisonous; venomous.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate veneous bodies, or to attract or evacuate them hence. Harvey.

Malphigi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, demonstrates that all such tumours, where any insects are found, are raised up by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed upon the leaves. Roy.

VENERABLE. adj. [venerabilis, Fr. venerabilis, Latin.] To be regarded with awe; to be treated with reverence.

As by the ministry of saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; or in regard of death, which those saints have suffered for the testimony of Jesus Christ, did thereby make the places where they died venerable. Hooker.

To make the passage easy, safe, and plain,
That leads us to this venerable wall. Fairfax.

VEN

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands, now free. Thou venerable sky!
Inviolable pow'rs, ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adur'd. Dryden's Zen. II.

VENERABLY. adj. [from venerable.] In a manner that excites reverence.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,
An awful pile! stands venerably great.

Thither the kingdoms and the nations come. Addison.

To VENERATE. v. a. [venerar, Fr. veneror, Latin.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not hate
The place its honour for the person's sake:
The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,
And not the beast that bears it on its back. Horbert.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning. Clarissa.

VENERATION. n. f. [veneratio, Fr. veneratio, Lat.] Reverend regard; awful respect.

Theology is the comprehension of all other knowledge, directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the creator, and the happiness of mankind. Locke.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

VENERATOR. n. f. [from venerare.] Reverencer.

If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a re-pugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerated of nature. Hale.

VENEREAL. adj. [venereus, Latin.]

1. Relating to love.

There are no venereal signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand. Shakspeare.

Then swoon'd with pride, into the snare I fell,
Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,
Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

They are averse to venereal pleasure. Addison.

2. Consisting of copper, called venere by chemists.

Blue vitriol, how venereal and unpolished soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

VENEROUS. adj. [from venerary.] Libidinous; lustful.

The male is less than the female, and very venereus. Derb.

VENERY. n. f. [venerie, from vener, Fr.]

1. The sport of hunting.

To the woods she goes to serve her turn,
And seek her spouse, that from her still does fly,
And follows other game and venery. Fairy Queen.

Describing beasts of venery and fittes, he hath sparingly inserted the vulgar conditions thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Norman demolished many churches and chapels in New Forest, to make it fitter for his pleasure and venery. Hewell.

2. [From Venus.] The pleasures of the bed.

Contentment, without the pleasure of lawful venery, is continence; of unlawful, chastity. Grew's Cosmol.

VENERY. n. f. A bout; a turn.

I bruis'd my shin with playing at sword and dagger, three venerys for a dish of stewed prunes. Shakspeare.

VENERECTION. n. f. [vena and rectio, Latin.] Blood-letting;
the act of opening a vein; phlebotomy.

If the inflammation be sudden, after evacuation by lenient purgatives, or a clyster and venectomy, have recourse to anodynes. Wifeman's Surgery.

To VENGE. v. a. [venger, French.] To avenge; to punish.

You are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakspeare.

VENGEABLE. adj. [from venge.] Revengeful; malicious.

A thrillant dart he threw,
Headed with ire, and vengeable despite. Spenser.

VENGEANCE. n. f. [vengeance, French.]

1. Punishment; penal retribution; avengement.

The right conceit which they had, that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect as touching their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.

All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Shakspeare's K. Lear.

The souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent, and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard. Shakspeare.

Let me see thy vengeance on them. Jer. xi. 20.

Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. K. Charles.

Jove's and Latona's son his wrath express'd,
In vengeance of his violated priest. Dryden.

The chorus interceded with heaven for the innocent, and implored its vengeance on the criminal. Addison's Spectator.

VEN

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehemence; what a vengeance, emphatically what?
Till the day appear, of reparation to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.
When the same king adventured to murmur, the pope could threaten to teach him his duty with a vengeance. Raleigh.
Afinodous the fifty fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the spouse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Medea post to Egypt, there fast bound. Milton.
But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.
VENGEFUL. adj. [from vengeance and full.] Vindictive; revengeful; retributive.
Doubt not but God
Hath wifelier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.
Dissembling for her sake his rising cares,
And with wife silence pond'ring vengeful wars. Prior.
VENIABLE. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
VENIAL. adj. [from venia, Fr. from venia, Latin.]
1. Pardonable; susceptible of pardon; excusable.
If they do nothing 'tis a venial slip. Shakespeare.
More veniable is a dependence upon potable gold, whereof Paracelsus, who died himself at forty-seven, gloried that he could make other men immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
What horror will invade the mind,
When the strict judge, who would be kind,
Shall have few venial faults to find? Rescuer.
While good men are in extirpating mortal sins, I should rally the world out of indecencies and venial transgressions. Addison.
2. Permitted; allowed.
No more of talk where God, or angel-guest,
With man, as with his friend, familiar us'd
To sit indulgent, and with him partake Rural repast; permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
VENIALNESS. n. f. [from venial.] State of being excusable.
VENISON. n. f. [from venison, French.] Game; beast of chase;
the flesh of deer.
Shall we kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Shou'd have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.
We have a hot venison patty to dinner. Shakespeare.
In the records of Ireland, no mention is made of any park, though there be vert and venison within this land. Davies's Hist. of Ireland.
He for the feast prepar'd,
In equal portions with the venison shar'd. Dryden.
VENOM. n. f. [from venia, French.] Poison.
Your eyes, which hitherto hath borne in them
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks we fairly hope
Have lost their quality. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
Beware of yonder dog;
Look, when he fawns, he bites; and, when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Like some tall tree, the monster of the wood,
O'erhanging all that under him would grow,
He sheds his venom on the plants below. Dryden.
TO VENOM. v. a. To infect with venom.
VENOMOUS. adj. [from venom.]
1. Poisonous.
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thy eyes. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
2. Malignant; mischievous.
A posterity not unlike their majority of mischievous progenitors; a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown.
This falsity was broached by Cocheus, a venomous writer;
one careless of truth or falsehood. Addison.
VENOMOUSLY. adv. [from venomous.] Poisonously; mischievously; malignantly.
His unkindness,
That strip'd her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties. These things ring him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
His praise of foes is venomously nice;
So touch'd, it turns a virtue to a vice. Dryden.
VENOMOUSNESS. n. f. [from venomous.] Poisonousness; malignity.
VEN. n. f. [from venia, French.]
1. A small aperture; a hole; a spiracle; a passage at which any thing is let out.
On her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown;
The like is on her arm. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
They at once their reeds
Put forth, and to a narrow vent apply'd
With nicest touch. Milton's Par. Lost.
Have near the bung-hole a little vent-hole stopp'd with a stopple. Mortimer's Husbandry.

VEN

- Scarce any countries that are much annoyed with earthquakes, that have not one of these fiery vents, disgorging that fire, whereby it gains an exit. Woodward.
To draw any drink, be not at the trouble of opening a vent;
or if you take out the vent, stay not to put it in.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the furies issued at the vent. Pope.
2. Passage out of secrecy to public notice.
It failed by late setting-out, and some contrariety of weather, whereby the particular design took vent beforehand. Watson.
3. The act of opening.
The farmer's cadets mature,
Now call for vent; his lands exhaust, permit
T' indulge a-while. Philips.
4. Emission; passage.
The smother'd fondness burns within him;
When most it swells and labours for a vent,
The sense of honour, and desire of fame,
Drive the big passion back into his heart. Addison's Cato.
5. Discharge; means of discharge.
Had, like grief, been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words. Milton.
Land-floods are a great improvement of land, where a vent can be had. Mortimer's Husbandry.
6. [from vente, Fr. ventitia, Lat.] Sale.
For the mart, it was alledged that the vent for English cloaths would hereby be open in all times of war. Hayward.
By this war there is no vent for any commodity but of wool. Temple's Miscellany.
He drew off a thousand copies of a treatise, which not one in threefore can understand, can hardly exceed the vent of that number. Pope's Letters.
TO VENT. v. a. [from venter, French, from the noun; venter, Italian.]
1. To let out at a small aperture.
Hunger broke stone walls; that the gods sent not Corn for the rich men only: with these shreds
They vented their complainings. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
When men are young, and have little else to do, they might vent the overflows of their fancy that way. Denham.
Lab'ring still, with endless discontent,
The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.
2. To utter; to report.
Had it been vented and imposed in some of the most learned ages, it might then, with some pretence of reason, have been said to be the invention of some crafty statesman. Stephens.
3. To emit; to pour out.
Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
4. To publish.
Their sectators did greatly enrich their inventions, by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters, alter'd by profane additions, and disguised by poetical conversions. Raleigh.
5. To sell; to carry to sale.
This profitable merchandize not rising to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities, they impute to the owners not venting and venturing the same. Carew.
Therefore did those nations vent such spice, sweet gums and pearls, as their own countries yielded.
TO VENT. v. n. To snuff. As he venteth into the air. Spenser.
VENTAIL. n. f. [from vantail, Fr.] That part of the helmet made to lift up.
VENTA'NNA. n. f. [Spanish.] A window.

Was far from the ventanna, when I fate;
But you were near, and can the truth relate. Dryden.
VENTER. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Any cavity of the body, chiefly applied to the head, breast and abdomen, which are called by anatomists the three venters.
2. Womb; mother.
A has issue B a son, and C a daughter, by one venter; and D a son by another venter. If B purchases in fee, and dies without issue, it shall descend to the sister, and not to the brother of the half blood. Hale.
VENTIDUCT. n. f. [from ventus and ductus, Latin.] A passage for the wind.
Having been informed of divers ventiducts, I wish I had had the good fortune, when I was at Rome, to take notice of these organs. Boyle.
TO VENTILATE. v. a. [from ventila, Latin.]
1. To fan with wind.
In close, low, and dirty alleys, the air is penn'd up, and obstructed from being ventilated by the winds. Harvey.
Miners, by perspirations with large bellows, letting down tubes, and sinking new shafts, give free passage to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines. Woodward.
2. To winnow; to fan.
3. To examine; to discuss. Nor

VEN

- Nor is the right of the party, nor the judicial process in right of that party so far peremptory; but that the same may be begun again, and ventilated de novo. Ayliffe.
VENTILATION. n. f. [from ventilatio, Lat. from ventilare.]
1. The act of fanning; the state of being fanned.
The foul, worn with too frequent culture, must lie fallow, fill it has recruited its exhausted salts, and again enriched itself by the ventilations of the air. Addison.
2. Vent; utterance. Not in use.
To his secretary Doctor Masfon, whom he let lie in a pal-let near him, for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would break out into bitter eruptions. Wotton's Buckingham.
3. Refrigeration.
Procure the blood a free course, ventilation and transpira-tion by suitable and esphraic purges. Harvey.
VENTILATOR. n. f. [from ventilare.] An instrument contrived by Dr. Hale to supply close places with fresh air.
VENTRICLE. n. f. [from ventriculus, Fr. ventriculus, Latin.]
1. The stomach.
Whether I will or not, while I live, my heart beats, and my ventricle digests what is in it. Hale.
2. Any small cavity in an animal body, particularly those of the heart.
Know'st thou how blood, which to the heart doth flow,
Doth from one ventricle to the other go? Donne.
The heart being a muscular part, the sides are composed of two orders of fibres running spirally from base to top, contrarily one to the other; and so being drawn or contracted, confining the ventricles, and strongly force out the blood. Ray.
The mixture of blood and chyle, after its circulation through the lungs, being brought back into the left ventricle of the heart, is drove again by the heart into the aorta, through the whole arterial system. Arbutnot.
VENTRICOLOUS. n. f. [from ventriculus, Fr. venter and loquax, Lat.]
One who speaks in such a manner as that the sound seems to issue from his belly.
VENTURE. n. f. [from aventure, Fr.]
1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance and danger.
When he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so, as if absolutely there were none; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture, and absurd choice. South.
I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryden.
When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture? Lacke.
2. Chance; hap.
The king resolved with all speed to assail the rebels, and yet with that providence and surety, as should leave little to venture or fortune. Bacon.
3. The thing put to hazard; a stake.
My ventures are not in one bottom trusted,
Nor to one place. Shakespeare. Mer. of Venice.
On such a full sea we are now afloat:
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.
4. A VENTURE. At hazard; without much consideration; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.
You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.
A bargain at a venture made,
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.
A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them that their desire should be granted at a venture.
Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.
If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure, unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his heart. South.
TO VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To dare.
A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suit, will not in the conclusion lose both the suit and his own former favour. Bacon.
Origin mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the favour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

VER

2. To run a hazard.
Nor is indeed that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas,
With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave. Dryden.
I am so overjoy'd, I can scarce believe I am at liberty;
like a bird that has often beaten her wing in vain against her cage, dare hardly venture out, though she see it open. Dryden.
3. To VENTURE at. To engage in; or make attempts To VENTURE on or upon. } without any security of success, upon mere hope.
That slander is found a truth now; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Shakespeare.
It were a matter of great profit, save that it is too conjectural to venture upon, if one could discern what corn, herbs, or fruits are like to be in plenty and scarcity, by some signs in the beginning of the year. Bacon.
I never yet the tragic strain essay'd,
Deter'd by that inimitable maid:
And when I venture at the comic stile,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Waller.
Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms as anxiety and fœtias. Lacke.
Turco-Papismus I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping of characters. Aterbury.
TO VENTURE. v. a.
1. To expose to hazard.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight;
By vent'ring both, I oft found both. Shakespeare.
2. To put or send on a venture.
The fifth ventured for France, they pack in staunch hogheads, so as to keep them in their pickle. Carew.
VENTURER. n. f. [from venture.] He who ventures.
VENTUROUS. adj. [from venture.] Daring, bold, fearless;
ready to run hazards.
Charles was guided by mean men, who would make it their master-piece of favour to give venturous counsels, which no great or wise man would. Bacon.
He paus'd not, but with vent'rous arm
He pluck'd, he tasted. Milton's Par. Lost.
The vent'rous humour of our mariners costs this island
many brave lives every year. Temple.
Savage pirates seek through seas unknown,
The lives of others, vent'rous of their own. Pope.
VENTUROUSLY. adv. [from venturous.] Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.
Siege was laid to the fort by the Lord Gray, then deputy, with a smaller number than those were within the fort; venturosly indeed; but haste was made to attack them before the rebels came in to them. Bacon.
VENTUROUSNESS. n. f. [from venturous.] Boldness; willingness to hazard.
Her coming into a place where the walls and ceilings were whited over, much offended her sight, and made her repent her vent'rousness. Boyle on Colours.

VERACITY. n. f. [from verax, Latin.]
1. Moral truth; honesty of report.
2. Physical truth; consistency of report with fact. Less proper.
When they submitted to the most ignominious and cruel deaths, rather than retract their testimony, there was no reason to doubt the veracity of those facts which they related. Addison.
VERACIOUS. adj. [from verax, Latin.] Observant of truth.
VERB. n. f. [from verbe, Fr. verbum, Lat.] A part of speech signifying existence, or some modification thereof, as action, passion. And withal some disposition or intention of the mind relating thereto, as of affirming, denying, interrogating, commanding.
Men usually talk of a noun and a verb. Shakespeare.
VERBAL. adj. [from verbalis, Fr. verbalis, Latin.]
1. Spoken, not written.
2. Oral; uttered by mouth.
Made she no verbal quest? —
Yes, once or twice she heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it prest her heart. Shakespeare.
3. Consisting in mere words.
If young African for fame, a venturous
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least; no more
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Being at first out of the way to science, in the progress of their inquiries they must lose themselves, and the truth, in a verbal labyrinth.
It was such a denial or confession of him as would appear in preaching: but this is managed in words and verbal pro-fection. South.

VER

4. Verbose; full of words. Out of use. I am sorry. You put me to forget a lady's manners, By being so verbal. Shakespeare.
5. Minutely exact in words.
6. Literal; having word answering to word. Neglect the rules each verbal critic lays, For not to know some trifles is a praise. Pope.
Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Denham.
The verbal copier is incumber'd with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself from all. Dryden.
7. [verbal, Fr. in grammar.] A verbal noun is a noun derived from a verb.
VERBALITY. n. f. [from verbal.] Mere bare words. Sometimes he will seem to be charmed with words of holy scripture, and to fly from the letter and dead verbality, who must only start at the life and animated materials thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VERBALLY. adv. [from verbal.]
1. In words; orally. The manner of our denying the deity of Christ here prohibited, was by words and oral expressions verbally to deny it. South's Sermons.
2. Word for word. 'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally, and well, at the same time. Dryden.
VERBATIM. adv. [Latin.] Word for word. Think not, although in writing I prefer'd The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes, That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen. Shakespeare.
See the transcripts of both charters verbatim in Mat. Paris. Hale.
TO VERBERATE. v. a. [verbero, Lat.] To beat; to strike.
VERBERATION. n. f. [verberation, Fr. from verberate.] Blows; beating.

VERDURIOUS. adj. [from verdure.] Green; covered with green; decked with green. 2.

VER

Higher than their tops. The verdurous wall of paradise up-sprung, Which to our general fire gave prospect large. Milton.
There the lowing herds chew verdurous pasture. Philips.
VERECUND. adj. [verecund, old French; verecundus, Latin.] Modest; bashful.
VERGE. n. f. [verge, Fr. virga, Latin.]
1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean. Suppose him now a dean compleat, Devoutly lolling in his seat; The silver verge, with decent pride, Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
2. [verge, Latin.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border. Would the inclusive verge Of golden metal, that must round my brow, Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakespeare.
I lay, and will in battle prove, Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge, That ever was survey'd by English eye. Shakespeare.
You are old, Nature in you stands on the very verge Of her confine. Shakespeare's Lear.
Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud, Lest it again dissolve and show'r the earth. Milton.
Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me, I have a soul, that, like an ample shield, Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden.
Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison.
Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair, To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir, To sooth his care, and free from noise and strife, Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.
3. In law. Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of a manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowel.
Fear not; whom we raise, We will make fast within a hallow'd verge. Shakespeare.
TO VERGE. v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend; to bend downwards. They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the pene-aperture; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder.
The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left. Swift.
Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Arbutnot.
Man, Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown; Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal; 'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.

TO VERIFY. v. n. [verifier, Fr.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true. What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hooker.
This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored. Bacon.
So shalt thou best fulfill, best verify The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton.
So spake this oracle, then verify'd, When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve, Saw Satan fall. Milton's Par. Lost.
Though you may mistake a year, Though your prognosticks run too fast, To verify'd at last. Swift.
Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift's Martin's Prophecy.
VERILY. adv. [from very.]
1. In truth; certainly. Verily 'tis better to be lowly born, Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief. Shakespeare.
2. With

VER

2. With great confidence. It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disavours of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded. Bacon.
By repeating the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacramental Test.
VERISIMILAR. adj. [verisimilis, Latin.] Probable; likely.
VERISIMILITUDE. n. f. [verisimilitudo, Latin.] Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth. Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown.
A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed. Brown's Vul. Er.
Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. I like a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery: while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy held for loose enquiry. Glanville.
The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden's Essay on Dramatick Poetry.
Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden.
VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, Fr.] True; agreeable to fact. Indeed! 'tis true? — Most veritable; therefore look to't well. Shakespeare.
The preface of the year succeeding made from insects in oak-apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VERITY. n. f. [veritas, Fr. veritas, Latin.]
1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things. If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker.
I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise; That's verity. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The precipitancy of disputation, and the fur and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm intimations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a croud of sailors in a storm. Glanville.
It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South.
2. A true assertion; a true tenet. And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney.
Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleases God, of his gracious goodness, to infill that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls. Hooker.
If there come truth from them, Why by the verities on these made good, May they not be my oracles as well? Shakespeare.
Must virtue be preferred by a lie? Virtue and truth do ever best agree; By this it seems to be a verity, Since the effects to good and virtuous be. Davies.
3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts. VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, French.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced verges. Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. L'Estrange.
The barley-pudding comes in place: Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges, A peck'd sic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.
The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd Of tart and sweet. Philips.

Of these elements are constituted the smallest fibres; of those fibres the vesels; of those vesels the organs of the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
3. Any vehicle in which men or goods are carried on the water.
The sons and nephews of Noah, who peopled the isles, had vesels to transport themselves. Raleigh's Essays.
The vesel is represented as stranded. The figure before it seems to lift it off the shallows. Addison on Medals.
From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,
Let thy strong hand this little vesel guide;
It was thy hand that made it: through the tide
Impetuous of this life, let thy command
Direct my course, and bring me safe to land. Prior.
Now secure the painted vesel glides;
The fun-beams trembling on the floating tides. Pope.
4. Any capacity; any thing containing.
I have my fill
Of knowledge, what this vesel can contain. Milton.
To VEVSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a vessel; to barrel.

VET

- Take earth, and vesel it; and in that set the feed. Bacon.
- VEVSETS.* n. f. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.
- VEVSSICKNON.* n. f. [among horsemen.] A windgall, or soft swelling on the inside and outside of a horse's hoof. Diët.
- VEST.* n. f. [vestis, Lat.] An outer garment.
Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
When the queen in royal habit's dress,
Old mystick emblems grace th' imperial vest. Smith.
- To VEST. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.
The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie,
With ether vested, and a purple sky. Dryden.
Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In gloom. Thomson.
2. To dress in a long garment.
Just Simeon; and prophetic Anna spoke,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.
3. To make possessor of; to invest with.
To settle men's consciences, 'tis necessary that they know the person, who by right is vested with power over them. Locke.
Had I been vested with the monarch's power,
Thou must have sigh'd, unlucky youth! in vain. Prior.
4. To place in possession.
The militia their commissioners positively required to be entirely vested in the parliament. Clarendon.
Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.
- VESTAL.* n. f. [vestalis, Latin.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.
Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakepeare.
How happy is the blameless vestal's lot?
The world forgetting, by the world forgot. Pope.
- VESTAL.* adj. [vestalis, Latin.] Denoting pure virginity.
Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it. Shakepeare.
- VESTIBULE.* n. f. [vestibulum, Lat.] The porch or first entrance of a house.
- VESTIGE.* n. f. [vestigium, Lat.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.
The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestiges. Harvey.
- VESTIMENT.* n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.
Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God, should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than that their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections. Hooker.
Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those fable vestments, and that bright aspect. Waller.
The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.
- VEVSTRY.* n. f. [vestiare, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]
1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments, and consecrated things are deposited.
Bold Amycus, from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight. Dryden.
2. A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.
The common-council are chosen every year, so many for every parish, by the vestry, and common convention of the people of that parish. Clarendon.
Go with me where paltry constables will not summon us to vestries. Blount to Pope.
- VEVSTURE.* n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]
1. Garment; robe.
Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedy light repelling. Fairfax.
What, weep you when you but behold
Our Caesar's vesture wounded? Shakefp. Julius Caesar.
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss. Shakefp.
Here ruddy bras, and gold resplendent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroider'd vestures grac'd. Pope.
2. Dress; habit; external form.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakefp.
Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparel'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and vallies. Bentley.
- VEVCH.* n. f. [vechia, Lat.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower; from the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a pod full of roundish or angular seeds: to which must be added, that the leaves grow by pairs on a middle rib, ending in a tendril.

UGL

Where vetches, pulses, and tares have flood,
And stalks of lupines grew. Dryden.
An ervum is a sort of vetch, or small pea. Arbutnot.
VE'TCHY, n. f. [from vetch.] Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consisting of vetch or pease-straw.
If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou liege in a vetchy bed,
Till fairer fortune shew forth his head. Spenser.
VE'TERAN, n. f. [veteranus, Latin.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.
We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the beau monde. Addison.
The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest,
the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest-practised veterans they had amongst them. Hooker.
If king Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans, which had been inured to service in the civil wars. Addison.
Ensigns that pierc'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veteran with tears relings. Addison.
VE'TERAN, adj. Long practised in war; long experienced.
There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Bacon.
The British youth shall hail thy wife command;
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Thomson.
VETERINARIAN, n. f. [veterinarius, Latin.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.
That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also receiv'd by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discours'd upon horses. Brown.
TO VEX, v. a. [vexo, Latin.]
1. To plague; to torment; to harass.
Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.
Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shak.
When she press'd him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Judges xvi. 16.
Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the giddy train. Dryden.
You are the cause of all my care;
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Prior.
2. To disturb; to disquiet.
Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex sea; singing aloud. Shakespeare.
Rang'd on the banks beneath our equal oars,
White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.
3. To trouble with slight provocations.
VEXA'TION, n. f. [from vex.]
1. The act of troubling.
O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.
Vexation almost stops my breath.
That fondred friends greets in the hour of death. Shakespeare.
Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.
3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.
Your children were vexation to your youth;
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakespeare.
4. An act of harassing by law.
Albeit the party grieved thereby, may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.
5. A slight teasing trouble.
VEXA'TIOUS, adj. [from vexation.]
1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.
Consider him maintaining his usurped title, by continual vexatious wars against the kings of Judah. South.
Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrify'd my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;
Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.
2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.
He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is to gored with cruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.
3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.
VEXA'TIOUSLY, adv. [from vexatious.] Troublesomely; uneasily.
VEXA'TIOUSNESS, n. f. [from vexatious.] Troublesomeness; uneasiness.
VEXER, [from vex.] He who vexes.
UGLY, adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.
UGLINESS, n. f. [from ugly.]
1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

VIB

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topics from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.
2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.
Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the fin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.
UGLY, adj. [This word was antiently written ough; whence Mr. Dier ingeniously deduces it from eyphlike; that is, like an ough, elf, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terror; and in Gothic ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight;
contrary to beautiful.
If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakespeare.
O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly thoughts, of ghastly dreams.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.
VIAL, n. f. [Phiala.] A small bottle.
Edward's seven sons
Were as seven vials of his sacred blood. Shakespeare.
You Gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakespeare.
Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off.
Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Wilkins.
I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addison.
Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addison.
TO VIAL, v. a. To inclose in a vial.
This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds at the festivals
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays. Milton.
VIALD, n. f. [vianda, Fr. vianda, Ital.] Food; meat dress'd.
The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
I'th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viald. Shakespeare.
No matter, since
They've left their vials behind, for we have stomachs.
Wilt please you taste of what is here?
These are not fruits forbidden; no interdict
Defends the touching of these vials pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.
From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such vials, had better to abstain. Roy.
The tables in fair order spread;
Vials of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and favour; rich repast!
VIALTICUM, n. f. [Latin.]
1. Provision for a journey.
2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.
TO VIBRATE, v. a. [vibro, Latin.]
1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.
2. To make to quiver.
Breath vocalized, that is vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.
TO VIBRATE, v. n.
1. To play up and down, or to and fro.
The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quick-silver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate
a little up and down. Boyle.
Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.
2. To quiver.
The whisper, that to greatness fill too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.
VIBRA'TION, n. f. [from vibro, Latin.] The act of moving, or being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.
It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the fallies and vibrations of a harmless activity. South.
Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibra- tions being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.
Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.
VICAR.

VIC

VICAR, n. f. [vicarius, Latin.]
1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.
Procure the vicar.
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakespeare.
Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryden.
A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decreed, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order. Swift.
2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.
An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.
VICARAGE, n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.
This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.
VICA'RIOUS, adj. [vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.
The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regimen of the body. Hale.
What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul. Norris.
VICARSHIP, n. f. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.
VICE, n. f. [vitium, Latin.]
1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.
No spirit more grofs to love
Vice for itself. Milton.
The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.
2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.
No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakespeare.
Yet my poor country
Shall have more vice than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed.
Ungovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vice of the clergy in his age. Dryden.
3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.
I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ha! to the devil. Shakespeare.
His face made of brals, like a vice in a game. Tupper.
4. [Vice, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.
He found that marbles taught him percussion; bottle-screws,
the vice; whirlingigs, the axis in peritrochio. Arbutnot.
5. Grips; grasp.
If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakespeare.
6. [Vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command: as a viceroi; vice-chancellor.
TO VICE, v. a. [from the noun.] To draw.
With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't, or been an instrument
To vice you to't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakespeare's Winter Tale.
VICEDADMIRAL, n. f. [vice and admiral.]
1. The second commander of a fleet.
The foremost of the fleet was the admiral: the rear-admiral was Cara Mahometes, an arch-pirate. The vice- admiral in the middle of the fleet with a great squadron of galleys, struck sail directly. Kneller.
2. A naval officer of the second rank.
VICEDADMIRALTY, n. f. [from vice-admiral.] The office of a vice-admiral.
The vice-admiralty is exercised by Mr. Trenanion. Carew.
VICA'GENT, n. f. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.
A vassal Satan hath made his vice-agent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.
VICED, adj. [from vicied.] Vitious; corrupt.
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.
VICEGERENT, n. f. [vicem gerens, Lat.] A lieutenant;
one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.
All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these;
remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicegerent. Bacon.
Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his vicegerent; in hearty obedience to his church. Spenser.

VIC

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true vicegerent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.
Thou great vicegerent of the king;
In all affairs thou sole director. Swift.
VICEGERENT, adj. [vicegerens, Lat.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.
Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee, Vicegerent son! To thee I have transferr'd
All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell. Milton.
VICEGERENCY, n. f. [from vicegerent.] The office of a vice- gerent; lieutenantcy; deputed power.
The authority of confidence stands founded upon its vice- gerency and deputation under God. South.
VICCHANCELLOR, n. f. [vicecancellarius, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.
VICENARY, adj. [vicenarius, Lat.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.
VICEROY, n. f. [viceroi, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shakespeare.
Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.
We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.
VICEROYALTY, n. f. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a viceroi.
These parts furnish out vice-royalties for the grantees; but in war are incumbances to the kingdom. Addison.
VICETY, n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a vice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French perhaps, point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness.
A word not used.
Here is to the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety,
And old Sherwood's vicety. B. Johnson.
VICINITY, n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]
1. Nearness; state of being near.
The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades
the other. Hale.
The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.
2. Neighbourhood.
He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home,
and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.
Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.
VICINAGE, n. f. [vicinia, Lat.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.
VICINAL, adj. [vicinus, Lat.] Near; neighbouring.
VICINE, adj. [vicinus, Lat.]
Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track; as the making of one hole in the yielding mud, defaces the print of another near it. Glanville.
VICIOUS, adj. [from vice.] See VITIOUS. Devoted to vice;
not addict'd to virtue.
He heard this heavy curse,
Servants of servants on his vicious race. Milton.
VICISSITUDE, [vicissitudo, Latin.]
1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.
It makes through heav'n
Grateful vicissitudes, like day and night. Milton.
The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.
This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.
2. Revolution; change.
During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness. Atterb.
Verie sweetens toil, however rude the found,
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Gifford.
VICINTIENS, In law vicintiel rents are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicintiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.
VICTIM, n. f. [victima, Latin.]
1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.
All that were authors of so black a deed,
Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.
And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.
Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war,
The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.
2. Some

VIE

2. Something destroyed.
Behold where age's wretched victim lies;
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.
VICTOR. n. f. [victor, Lat.] Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive, and never but with regard to some single action or person. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.
This strange race more strange conceits did yield;
Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.
Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakefp.
Although the victor, we submit to Caesar. Shakefp.
Say where and when
Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milt.
Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd to well our victors ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume,
And now the victors fall. Denham.
In love the victors from the vanquish'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.
Fortune's unjust; the ruins of the brave,
And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.
Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger;
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.
VICTORIOUS. adj. [victoriosus, Fr.]
1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superiour in contest. Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
The great son return'd victorious with his pains. Milton.
That happy fun, said he, will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see:
And I alone mult view him rise in vain,
Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.
2. Producing conquest.
Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curs'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.
3. Betokening conquest.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakefp.
VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victoriosus.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.
That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.
VICTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from victoriosus.] The state or quality of being victorious.
VICTORY. n. f. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakefp.
Then to the heav'n of heav'n's he shall ascend
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.
Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.
VICTRESS. n. f. [from victor.] A female that conquers.
I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Caesar's Caesar. Shakefp.
VICTUAL. n. f. [victualles, Fr. vittuaglia, Ital.] Provision.
VICTUALS. n. f. of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance.
He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shakefp.
He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual. Knolles.
They, unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea by a storm. K. Charles.
To VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.
Talbot, farewell;
I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shakefp.
VICTUALLER. n. f. [from victuals.] One who provides victuals.
They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers furcated not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.

Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.
These things duly weigh'd, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.
Instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
Full in my view let all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.
3. Act of seeing.
Th' unexpected found
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view
Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.
Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.
4. Sight; eye.
She was not much struck with those objects that now presented themselves to her view. Female Quixote.

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shakefp.
No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shakefp. K. Lear.
In their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilance, and voluntary hazard of his person. Watson.
Of these the vigilance
I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure.
We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Roy.
3. Guard; watch.
In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.
VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Latin.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.
They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.
Take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakespeare.
The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarend.
VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

3. Energy; efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.
How does Cartesius all his lineus strain,
The earth's attractive vigour to explain? Blackmore.
VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Lat.] Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.
Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight to vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.
I disdainful scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteem'd. Shakefp.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; he he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shakefp.
The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing. Abbot.
That sinful creature man elected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairfax.
A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the vilest of weeds. Bentl.
2. Morally impure; wicked.
Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.
VILED. adj. [from vile, whence revile.] Abusive; scurrilous; defamatory.
He granted life to all except to one, who had used vile speeches against king Edward. Hayward.
VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly; shamefully.
The Volicians vilely yielded the town. Shakefp.
How can I
Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy. A. Philips.
VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]
1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.
His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be:
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.
Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to conserve its own being. Creech.
Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, what dost thou make? Swift.
2. Moral or intellectual baseness.
Then, vileness of mankind!
Could one, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.
To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.] To debase; to defame; to make contemptible.
Tomalin could not abide,
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
Their maker's image
Forlook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite; and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.
Many passions dispose us to depress and vilify the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind. Addison.
VILL. n. f. [ville, Fr. villa, Latin.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.
VILLA. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.
The ancient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.
All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.
29 F VILLAGE.

VIL

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.
Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, steep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shakespeare.
The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn.
You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so; but, like the village curs,
Bark when their fellows do. Shakespeare.
The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Knolles.
Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryden.
Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own fabre gave,
In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.
VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.
Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shakespeare.
When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.
If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.
VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.
Robin Goodfellow, are you not he,
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shakespeare.
VILLAIN. n. f. [villain, Fr. villanus, low Latin.]
1. One who held by a base tenure.
The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue, than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.
2. A wicked wretch.
We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them.
O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter. Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shakespeare.
What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shakespeare.
He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.
Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politicks. Pope.
VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]
1. The state of a villain; base servitude.
They exercise most bitter tyranny,
Upon the parts brought into their bondage:
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Fairy Queen.
Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.
2. Baseness; infamy.
If in thy innoce it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.
To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade;
to defame.
Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.
These are the fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.
VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.] Baseness; wickedness.
1. Base; vile; wicked.
2. Sorry.
Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shakespeare.
3. It is used by Shakespeare to exaggerate any think detestable.
We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shakespeare. Tempest.
VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.] Wickedly; basely.
The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.

ness.
VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villomnie, old French.]
1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity.
Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum:
And he, long traded in, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.
He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shakespeare.
2. A wicked action; a crime.

VIN

No villany, or flagitious action was ever yet committed;
but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.
Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.
VILLATICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.
Evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perched roofs,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.
VILLI. n. f. [Latin.]
In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of pluff or fluff, with which, as a kind of excrecence, some trees do abound. Quincy.
VILLOUS. adj. [villosus, Lat.] Shaggy; rough.
The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arb.
VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Latin.] Made of twigs.
As in the hive's vimineous dome,
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.
VINCIBLE. adj. [from vincere, Lat.] Conquerable; supe-rable.
He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the feditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.
Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible. Norris.
VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.] Liableness to be overcome. Did.
VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding. Baile.

To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindicare, Lat.]
1. To justify; to support; to maintain.
Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syl-logism. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.
2. To revenge; to avenge.
We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued; whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity? Bacon.
Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion. Pearson on the Creed.
The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront. Tilghson.
Assemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.
3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.
Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.
The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade. Dryden.
4. To clear; to protect.
God's ways of dealing with us, are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his son. Hammond.
I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.
VINDICATION. n. f. [vindication, Fr. from vindicare.] Defence; assertion; justification.
This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice, in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Brauns.
VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicare.] Revengeful; given to revenge.
He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.
Publick revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.
The fruits of adust choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. Howell.
Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious or vindicative? Whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Sprat's Sermon.
Distinguish betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. L'Estrange.
VINDICATOR.

VIN

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicare.] One who vindicates;
an assertor.
He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleas'd with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temperizing poet. Dryden.
VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicare.]
1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.
The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbs.
2. Defensory; justificatory.
VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Latin.] Given to revenge;
revengeful.
I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

Depending vines the shelving cavern screen,
With purple clusters blushing through the green. Pope.
VINEGAR. n. f. [vinagre, Fr.]
1. Wine grown sour.
Vinegar is made by setting the vessel of wine against the hot sun; and therefore vinegar will not burn, much of the finer parts being exhaled. Bacon.
Heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more four. Pope.
2. Any thing really or metaphorically sour.
Some laugh like parrots at a bag-piper,
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile. Shakespeare.
VINNEWED, or VINNEY. adj. Mouldy. Ainsworth.
VINEYARD. n. f. [vinetum, Saxon.] A ground planted with vines.
Let us not live in France; let us quit all,
And give our vineyards to a barbarous people. Shakespeare.
Though some had so forfeited in the vineyards, and with the vines, that they had been left behind, the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home again. Clarendon.
VINOUS. adj. [from vinum, Latin.] Having the qualities of wine; consisting of wine.
The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit. Boyle.

more lives than any malignant disease. Swift.
VINTRY. n. f. The place where wine is sold. Ainsworth.
VIOL. n. f. [violle, Fr. viola, Ital.] A stringed instrument of musick.
My tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstringed viol, or a harp. Shakespeare.
To strain a string, stop it with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols. Bacon.
Loud o'er the rest Cremona's trump doth sound;
Me softer airs besit, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things. Milton.
VIOLABLE. adj. [from violabilis, Lat.] Such as may be violated or hurt.
VIOLA'CEOUS. adj. [from viola, Lat.] Resembling violets.
To VIOLATE. v. a. [violare, Lat.]
1. To injure; to hurt.
I question thy bold entrance,
Employ'd to violate the sleep of those Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss. Milton.
Kindness for man, and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss, and yet not violate. Dryden.
Cease
To know what known will violate thy peace. Pope.
2. To infringe; to break any thing venerable.
Some of violated vows
Twixt the souls of friend and friend. Shakespeare.
Those offences which are by their special qualities breaches of supernatural laws, do also, for that they are generally evil, violate in general that principle of reason, which willett universally to fly from evil. Hooker.
3. To injure by irreverence.
I would violate my own arm rather than a church. Brown.
Forbid to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.

Obscure'd the glory of his rising arms. Prior.
VIOLA'TION. n. f. [violatio, Lat.]
1. Infringement or injury of something sacred.
Their right conceit that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect, as touching the course of their lives, who feared the wilful violation of oaths. Hooker.
Men, who had no other guide but their reason, considered the violation of an oath to be a great crime. Addison.
2. Rape; the act of deflowering.
If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation. Shakespeare.
VIOLA'TOR. n. f. [violator, Lat.]
1. One who injures or infringes something sacred.
May such places, built for divine worship, derive a blessing upon the head of the builders, as lasting as the curse that never fails to rest upon the sacrilegious violators of them. South.
2. A ravisher.
Angelo is an adult'rous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator. Shakespeare.
How does the subject herself to the violator's upbraidings and insults. Clarissa.
VIOLENCE. n. f. [violencia, Latin.]
1. Force; strength applied to any purpose.
To be imprison'd in the viewless wind,
And blown with restless violence about.
All the elements
At least had gone to wreck, disturb'd and torn
With violence of this conflict, had not soon
Th' eternal hung his golden scales. Milton.
2. An attack; an assault; a murder.
A noise did scare me from the tomb;
And she, too desperate, would not go with me:
But, as it seems, did violence on herself. Shakespeare.
3. Outrage; unjust force.
Grieved at his heart, when looking down he saw
The whole earth fill'd with violence; and all flesh Corrupting each their way. Milton's Par. Lost.
4. Eagerness; vehemence.
That seal
You ask with such violence, the king
With his own hand gave me. Shakespeare.
5. Injury; infringement.
We cannot, without offering violence to all records, divine and human, deny an universal deluge. Burnet.
6. Forceful deforation.
VIOLENT. adj. [violentus, Lat.]
1. Forceful; acting with strength.
A violent cross wind blows. Milton.
2. Produced or continued by force.
The posture we find them in, according to his doctrine, must be look'd upon as unnatural and violent; and no violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.
3. Not natural, but brought by force.
Conqueror death discovers them scarce men;
Violent or shameful death their due reward. Milton.
4. Un-

VIR

4. Unjustly assailant; murderous.
Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shakesp.
A foe subtle or violent. Milton.
5. Unfeignably vehement.
We might be reckoned fierce and violent, to tear away that, which, if our mouths did condemn, our consciences would storm and repine thereat. Hooker.
The covetous extortioner should remember, that such vi- olents shall not take heaven, but hell by force. Decay of Piety.
6. Extorted; not voluntary.
Vows made in pain, are violent and void. Milton.
VIOLENTLY, adv. [from violent.] With force; forcibly; vehemently.
Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Flame burneth more violently towards the sides, than in the midst. Bacon.
Ancient privileges must not, without great necessities, be revoked, nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
- VIOLET, n. f. [viollette, Fr. viola, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a polypetalous anomalous flower, somewhat resembling the papilionaceous flower; for its two upper petals represent the standard, the two side ones the wings; but the lower one, which ends in a tail, resembles the iris. Out of the empalement arises the pointal, which becomes a three-cornered fruit opening into three parts, and full of roundish seeds. There are nine species. Miller.
When daisies pied, and violets blue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakesp.
Sweet echo, sweetest nymph that liv'st unseen,
By slow Meander's margent green,
And in the violet-embroider'd vale. Milton.
It alters not our simple idea, whether we think that blue be in the violet itself, or in our mind only; and only the power of producing it by the texture of its parts, to be in the violet itself. Locke.
- VIOLIN, n. f. [violon, Fr. from viol.] A fiddle; a stringed instrument of musick.
Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins, and lutes. Sandys.
Sharp violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
For the fair disdainful dame. Dryden.
- VIOLIST, n. f. [from viol.] A player on the viol.
- VIOLOCE'LLO, n. f. [Italian.] A stringed instrument of musick.
- VIPER, n. f. [viper, Lat.]
1. A serpent of that species which brings its young alive, of which most are poisonous.
A viper came out of the heat, and fastened on his hand. Acts xxviii. 3.
He'll gall of asps with thrifty lips suck in;
The viper's deadly teeth shall pierce his skin. Sandys.
Viper-catchers have a remedy, in which they place such great confidence, as to be no more afraid of the bite of a viper, than of a common puncture. This is no other than axungia viperina, presently rubbed into the wound. Derham.
2. Any thing mischievous.
Where is this viper,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself? Shakesp. Coriolanus.
- VIPERINE, n. f. [viperinus, Lat.] Belonging to a viper.
- VIPEROUS, adj. [viperus, Lat. from viper.] Having the qualities of a viper.
My tender years can tell,
Civil dissention is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth. Shakesp.
We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor. Shakesp.
Some viperous critick may bereave
Th' opinion of thy worth for some defect. Daniel's Musaph.
- VIPER'S, n. f. [echin, Lat.] A plant.
The characters are, the cup of the flower is large, and divided into five long slender segments; the flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a funnel, and somewhat inflected, having its upper part stretched, but in a greater length than the lower: the upper part, or galea of the flower, is divided into two; and the lower part, or beard, into three parts: in the middle of the flower are produced five stamina (or threads) which are reflexed. Each flower is succeeded by four seeds, which are in form of a viper's head. Miller.
- VIPER'S, n. f. [scorzonera, Lat.] A plant.
It hath a semi-floiculous flower, consisting of many half florets, which rest upon the embryos, which are included in one common empalement, which is scaly: the embryos afterwards become oblong seeds, which are furnished with down. Miller.
- VIRAGO, n. f. [Latin.]
1. A female warrior; a woman with the qualities of a man.
Melpomene represented like a virago or manly lady, with a majestic and grave countenance. Peacham.

VIR

- To arms! to arms! the fierce virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies. Pope.
2. It is commonly used in detestation for an impudent turbulent woman.- VIR'ELAY, n. f. [virolay, virolai, Fr.] A sort of little ancient French poem, that consisted only of two rhymes and short verses, with strops. L'Acad.
The mournful music in mirth now lift ne mask,
As she was wont in youth and summer days;
But if thou algate lust like virolays,
And looser songs of love to underlong. Spenser.
The band of flutes began to play,
To which a lady sung a virolay:
And still at ev'ry close she would repeat
The burden of the song, the daisy is so sweet. Dryden.
- VIR'ENT, adj. [virens, Lat.] Green; not faded.
In these, yet fresh and virent, they carve out the figures of men and women. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VIR'GE, n. f. [virga, Lat. better verge, from verge, French.]
A dean's mace.
Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly looting in his seat;
The silver virge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
- VIRGIN, n. f. [virgo, Fr. virgo, Lat.]
1. A maid; a woman unacquainted with men.
This aspect of mine hath fear'd the valiant;
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too. Shakesp.
Senseless bauble!
Art thou a fadary for this act, and look't
So virgin-like without? Shakesp. Cymbeline.
The damsel was very fair, and a virgin. Gen. xxiv. 16.
Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator.
Much less can that have any place,
At which a virgin hides her face. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
- 2. A woman not a mother. Unusual. Cowley.
Likely to Ceres in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove. Milton.
- 3. Any thing untouched or unmingled.

weighed, together with the virgin-mould. Derham.
- 4. The sign of the zodiack in which the sun is in August.
Thence down again by Leo and the Virgin. Milton.
- VIRGIN, adj. Begetting a virgin; suitable to a virgin; maidenly.
Can you blame her then, being a maid, yet rofod over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy. Shakesp. Hen. V.
What says the silver with her virgin hue?
With ease a brother o'ercame. Cowley.
- The formal decencies of virgin-thame.
- To VIRGIN, v. n. [a cant word.] To play the virgin.
A kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
I carried from thee, my dear; and my true lip Hath virgin'd it e'er since. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
- VIRGINAL, adj. [from virgin.] Maidenly; maidenly; pertaining to a virgin.
On the earth more fair was never seen,
Of chastity and honour virginal. Fairy Queen.
Tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax. Shakesp.
Purity is a special part of this superstructure, restraining of all desires of the flesh within the known limits of conjugal or virginal chastity. Hammond's Fundamentals.
- To VIRGINAL, v. n. To pat; to strike as on the virginal.
A cant word.
- Still virginal upon thy palm. Shakesp.
- VIRGINAL, n. f. [more usually virginals.] A musical instrument so called, because commonly used by young ladies.
The musician hath produced two means of training strings.
The one is stopping them with the finger, as in the necks of lutes and viols; the other is the shortness of the strings, as in harps and virginals. Bacon.
- VIRGINITY, n. f. [virginitas, Lat.] Maidenhead; unacquaintance with man.
You do impeach your modesty too much,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsel of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity. Shakesp.
Natural virginity of itself is not a state more acceptable to God; but that which is chosen in order to the conveniences of religion, and separation from worldly incumbrances. Taylor.
- VIRILE, n. f. [virilis, Lat.] Belonging to man; not puerile;
not feminine. VIRILITY.

VIR

- VIRILITY, n. f. [virilitas, Fr. virilitas, Lat. from virile.]
1. Manhood; character of man.
The lady made generous advances to the borders of virility. Rambler.- 2. Power of procreation.
The great climacterical was past, before they begat children, or gave any testimony of their virility; for none begat children before the age of sixty-five. Brown.
- VIRMI'LION, n. f. Properly vermilion. A red colour.
Egle, the fairest Nais of the flood,
With a vermilion dye his temples stain'd. Rescommon.
- VIR'TUAL, adj. [virtuel, Fr. from virtue.] Having the efficacy without the sensible or material part.
Metalline waters have virtual cold in them. Put therefore wood into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance. Bacon.
Love not the heav'nly spirits? And how their love Expresses they? by looks only? or, do they mix Irradiance? virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.
Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual pow'r, and warm'd. Milton.
Neither an actual or virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts. Stillingsfleet.
- VIR'TUALITY, n. f. [from virtual.] Efficacy.
In one grain of corn there lieth dormant a virtuality of many other, and from thence sometimes proceed an hundred ears. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- VIR'TUALLY, adv. [from virtual.] In effect, though not formally.
They are virtually contained in other words still continued. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Such is our constitution, that the bulk of the people vir- tually give their approbation to every thing they are bound to obey. Addison.
- To VIR'TUATE, v. a. [from virtus.] To make efficacious.
Potable gold should be endued with a capacity of being assimilated to the innate heat, and radical moisture; or at least virtuated with a power of generating the said essentials. Harvey.
- VIR'TUE, n. f. [virtus, Lat.]
1. Moral goodness.
Either I'm mistaken, or there is virtue in that Falstaff. Shakesp.
If there's a power above us,
And that there is, all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue,
And that which he delights in must be happy. Addison.
Virtue only makes our bliss below.
The character of prince Henry is improved by Shakespear; and through the veil of his vices and irregularities, we see a dawn of greatness and virtue. Shakesp. illustrated.
- 2. A particular moral excellence.
In Belmont is a lady,
And she is fair, and fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Remember all his virtues,
And shew mankind that goodness is your care. Addison.
- 3. Medicinal quality.
All blest secrets,
All you unpublisch'd virtues of the earth,
Be aidant and remediate. Shakesp. K. Lear.
The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue from those that feed in the valleys. Bacon.
- 4. Medicinal efficacy.
An essay writer must practise the chymical method, and give the virtue of a full draught in a few drops. Addison.
- 5. Efficacy; power.
If neither words, nor herbs will do, I'll try stones; for there's a virtue in them. L'Estrange.
Where there is a full purpose to please God, there, what a man can do, shall, by virtue thereof, be accepted. South.
They are not sure, by virtue of syllogism, that the conclusion certainly follows from the premises. Locke.
This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise made by God; and partly in virtue of piety. Asterbury.
He used to travel through Greece, by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.
- 6. Acting power.
Jesus knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about. Mark v. 30.
She moves the body, which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.
- 7. Secret agency; efficacy, without visible or material action.
She moves the body, which she doth possess;
Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.
- 8. Bravery; valour.
Truist to thy single virtue; for thy soldiers Took their discharge. Shakesp. K. Lear.
The conquest of Palestine, with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh.
- 9. Excellence; that which gives excellence.
In the Greek poets, as also in Plautus, the oeconomy of poems is better observed than in Terence; who thought the

VIR

- sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences, as ours do the forcing in of jests. B. Johnson.- 10. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.
Thrones, domination, principdoms, virtues, pow'rs. Milt.
A winged virtue through th' etherial sky,
From orb to orb unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.
- VIR'TUELESS, adj. [from virtue.]
1. Wanting virtue; deprived of virtue.
2. Not having efficacy; without operating qualities.
All second causes, together with nature herself, without that operative faculty which God gave them, would become altogether silent, virtueless, and dead. Raleigh.
Virtueless the wilft all herbs and charms,
Wherewith false men increase their patients harms. Fairfax.
Some would make those glorious creatures virtueless. Hakewill.
- VIR'TUOSO, n. f. [Italian.] A man skilled in antique or natural curiosities; a man studious of painting, statuary, or architecture.
Methinks those generous virtuosi dwell in a higher region than other mortals. Glanville.
Virtuosi, the Italians call a man who loves the noble arts, and is a critick in them. And amongst our French painters, the word virtueux is understood in the same signification. Dryd.
This building was beheld with admiration by the virtuosi of that time. Tatler, N^o. 52.
Showers of rain are now met with in every water-work;
and the virtuosi of France covered a little vault with artificial snow. Addison.
- VIR'TUOUS, adj. [from virtue.]
1. Morally good.
If his occasion were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
What she wills to do or say,
Is wisest, virtuous, discreetest, best. Milton.
Favour'd of heav'n, who finds
One virtuous rarely found,
That in domestick good combines:
Happy that house! his way to peace is smooth. Milton.
- 2. [Applied to women.] Chaste.
Mistress Ford, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! Shakesp.
- 3. Done in consequence of moral goodness.
Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind. Dryden.
- 4. Efficacious; powerful.
With one virtuous touch, th' arch-chemic sun,
Produces, with terrestrial humour mix'd,
Here in the dark, so many precious things. Milton.
- 5. Having wonderful or eminent properties.
Out of his hand,
That virtuous steel he rudely snatch'd away. Fairy Queen.
Lifting up his virtuous staff on high,
He smote the sea, which calmed was with speed. Spenser.
He own'd that virtuous ring and glass. Milton.
- 6. Having medicinal qualities.
Some observe that there is a virtuous bezoar, and another without virtue; the virtuous is taken from the beast that feedeth where there are theriacal herbs; and that without virtue, from those that feed where no such herbs are. Bacon.
The ladies fought around
For virtuous herbs, which, gather'd from the ground,
They squeeze'd the juice; and cooling ointment made. Dryd.
- VIR'TUOUSLY, adv. [from virtuous.] In a virtuous manner;
according to the rules of virtue.
The Gods are my witnesses, I desire to do virtuously. Sidney.
In sum, they taught the world no less virtuously how to die, than they had done before how to live. Hooker.
They that mean virtuously, and yet do so,
The devil their virtue tempts not, they tempt heav'n. Shak.
Not from grey hairs authority doth flow,
Nor from bald heads, nor from a wrinkled brow;
But our past life, when virtuously spent,
Must to our age those happy fruits present. Denham.
The coffeeman has a little daughter four years old, who has been virtuously educated. Addison.
- VIR'TUOUSNESS, n. f. [from virtuous.] The state or character of being virtuous.
Many other adventures are intermeddled; as the love of Britomert, and virtuousness of Belphebe; and the lasciviousness of Helenora. Spenser.
- VIRULENCE, n. f. [from virulent.] Mental poison; malignity; acrimony of temper; bitterness.
Disputes in religion are managed with virulence and bitterness. Decay of Piety.
It infills into their minds the utmost virulence, instead of that charity which is the perfection and ornament of religion. Addison.
The whigs might easily have maintained a majority among the clergy, if they had not too much encouraged this intemperance of speech, and virulence of pen, in the most profitable of their party. Swift.

VIS

VI'RU'LENT. adj. [virulent, Fr. virulentus, Lat.]

1. Poisonous; venomous.
2. Poisoned in the mind; bitter; malignant.

VI'RU'LENTLY. adv. [from virulent] Malignantly; with bitterness.

VI'SAGE. n. f. [visage, Fr. visaggio, Italian.] Face; countenance; look. It is now rarely used but with some ideas of dislike or horror.

Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watry glafs,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grafs. Shakesp.
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails She'll flea thy wolfish visage. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Whereto serves mercy,
But to confront the visage of offence. Shakesp. Hamlet.
With hostile frown,
And visage all inflam'd, first thus began. Milton.

By the rout, that made the hideous roar,
His goary visage down the stream was sent;
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore. Milton.

Love and beauty still that visage grace;
Death cannot fright 'em from their wonted place. Waller.

To VI'SCERATE. v. a. [viscera, Latin.] To embowel; to exentrate.

VI'SCID. adj. [viscidus, Latin.] Glutinous; tenacious.

VI'SCIDITY. n. f. [from viscid.] Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.

1. This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the *viscid*ity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.
2. Glutinous concretion.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their styplicity. Floyer.

VI'SCOSITY. n. f. [viscositas, Fr. from viscosus.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.
2. A glutinous substance.

A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrops, and seminal viscosities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VI'SCOUNT. n. f. [vicecomes, Lat.]

Viscount signifies as much as sheriff; between which two words there is no other difference, but that the one comes from our conquerors the Normans, and the other from our ancestors the Saxons. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us, till Henry VI. his days. Cruvel.

VI'SCOUNTESS. n. f. [from viscount.] Viscount and viscountess are pronounced viscount and viscountess.] The lady of a vis- count; a peeress of the fourth order.

VI'SCOUS. adj. [visqueux, Fr. viscosus, Lat.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious.

The cause of the scouring virtue of nitre is, that it hath a subtle spirit, which severeth and divideth any thing that is foul and viscous. Bacon.

Holly is of so viscous a juice as they make bird-lime of the bark. Bacon.

VI'SIBILITY. n. f. [visibilitas, Fr. from visibile.]

1. The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.
2. The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for their visibility, upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.

VI'SION. n. f. [visione, Fr.] One whose imagination is disturbed.

The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Fem. Quix.

To VI'SIT. v. a. [visiter, Fr. visite, Lat.]

1. To go to see.
2. To go to see the lady that lies in. — I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

VIS

VI'SIBLENESS. n. f. [from visibile.] State or quality of being visible.

VI'SIBLY. adv. [from visibile.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatnings; enough to see the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VI'SION. n. f. [vision, Fr. visio, Latin.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton's Opticks.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton's Opticks.

2. The act of seeing.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this;
or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is odious;
No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange. Sidney.

Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision. Shakesp.
God's mother deigned to appear to me;
And, in a vision, full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

To call by vision, from his father's house,
Into a land which he will shew him. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A dream; something shewn in a dream. A dream happens to a sleeping, a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supposed natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again;
The murderers come; now help, or I am slain!
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Dryden.

The idea of any thing in our mind, no more proves the existence of that thing, than the visions of a dream make a true history. Lect.

VI'SIONARY. adj. [visionnaire, Fr. from vision.]

1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.
2. Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bray'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

If you have any skill in dreams, let me know whether I have the same place in the real heart, that I had in the vi- sionary one. Addison.

Our victories only led us to further visionary prospects;
advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which success had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

VI'SIONIST. n. f. [visionnaire, Fr.] One whose imagination is disturbed.

The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Fem. Quix.

To VI'SIT. v. a. [visiter, Fr. visite, Lat.]

1. To go to see.
2. To go to see the lady that lies in. — I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

VIS

VI'SITABLE. adj. [from visit.] Liable to be visited.

All hospitals built since the reformation, are *visit*able by the king or lord chancellor. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VI'SITANT. n. f. [from visit.] One who goes to see another.

He alone
To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve,
While the great *visit*ant approach'd, thus spake. Milton.

One visit begins an acquaintance; and when the *visit*ant comes again, he is no more a stranger. South.

Edward the first, who had been a *visit*ant in Spain, upon action in the holy land, fixed both our pounds by the measures of the East. Arbutnot on Coins.

Griev'd that a *visit*ant so long shou'd wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate, Instant he flew. Pope's Odyssey. b. i. l. 160.

VI'SITATION. n. f. [visita, Latin.]

1. The act of visiting.
2. The act of visiting.

He comes not
Like to his father's greatness; his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us,
'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd. Shakesp. Winter Tale.

What would you with the princeps? —
— Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shakespeare.

3. Object of visits.

O slow'rs,
My early visitation, and my last. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Judicial visit or perambulation.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not burthen his churches; and then ought to send his arch-deacon, which was the original of the arch-deacon's visitation. Ayliffe.

5. Judicial visit by God; state of suffering judicial evil.

That which thou dost not understand when thou readest, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity. Taylor.

6. Communication of divine love.

The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities. Hooker.

VI'SITATORIAL. adj. [from visitor.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry; but others say that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per medium simplicis scrutini, as being bishop's vicar. Ayliffe's Paragon.

VI'SITER. n. f. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.
2. One who comes to see another.

Here's ado to look up honestly and honour from the access of gentle visitors. Shakespeare.

You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors. Shakesp.
Consumptives of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their intent of going here and there. Harvey.

I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visitor, if I were not able to hire him with a bottle of wine. Swift to Gay.

3. [Visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge; one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visitors expell'd the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possess'd themselves of their colleges. Walton.

To him you must your sickly state refer;
Your charter claims him as your visitor. Garth.

Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

VI'SNOMY. n. f. [from visio.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve gods do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty,
To judge the strife between them thir'd late:
Each of the gods by his like visnomy
Eath to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial. Spenser.

VI'SIVE. adj. [visivus, Fr. visus, Lat.] Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane; but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VI'SOR. n. f. [This word is variously written visard, visor, visor, vizard, vizor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visus, and concurring with visage, a kindred word; visere, French.] A mask used to disguise and disguise.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me;
and my weaker government since, makes you pull off the visor. Sidney.

VIT

This loutish clown is such that you never saw so ill-favoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.

By which deceit doth mask in visor fair,
And cast her colours dyed deep in grain,
To seem like truth, whose shape she well can fain. Spenser.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I wou'd essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakesp.

One visor remains,
And that is Claudio; I know him by his bearing. Shakesp.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a head-piece, or visor. Brown's Odyssey Notes.

VI'SORED. v. n. [from visor.] Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!
Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falshood, and base forgery. Milton.

VI'STA. n. f. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The fifth'd garden to the view
Its vista's opens, and its alleys green. Thomson's Spring.

VI'SUAL. adj. [visuel, French.] Used in sight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye thrust forth so as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The air,
No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then purg'd with euphrasy and rue
The visual nerve; for he had much to see. Milton.

Inward lights, alas,
Puts forth no visual beam! Milton's Agonistes.

VITAL. adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.
2. Relating to life.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach. Shakespeare.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel a-pace. Dryden.

3. Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout;
Vital in every part; not as frail man,
In intrails, heart, or head, liver, or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die. Milton's Par. Lost.

On the watry calm,
His brooding wings the spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth Throughout the fluid mals. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Being the seat of life.

The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. Pope.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal; but the progression thereto to be measured by rule. Brown.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art. Bp. Corbet.

VITA'LITY. n. f. [from vital.] Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God. Rayleigh's Hist. of the World.

For the security of species produced only by seed, providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that if by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years. Roy.

VITA'LITY. adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitality informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent maker. Bentley.

VITA'LITY. n. f. [Without the singular.] Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs, and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vital prey,
And melt my very soul away. Phillips.

VITELLARY. n. f. [from vitellus, Latin.] The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white. A greater

VIT

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitallary, or place of the yolk, is very high. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
TO VITIATE. v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature, before the was vitiated by luxury. Evelyn's Kalend.

The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters. Holder.

Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.

This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VITIATION. n. f. [from vitiate.] Depravation; corruption.

The foreaid extenuation of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation by malign, putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey on Consumptions.

TO VITILIGATE. v. n. [vitiosus and litige, Lat.] To contend in law.

VITILIGATION. n. f. [from vitiligate.] Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you by right ratiocination,
 To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.

VITIOSITY. n. f. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South's Sermons.

VITIOUS. adj. [vitiosus, Fr. vitiosus, Latin.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions.

Make known
 It is no vitious blot, murder, or foulness

That hath depriv'd me of your grace. Shakefp. K. Lear.

Witness th' irreverent son
 Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame

Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
 'Servant of servants,' on his vitious race. Milton.

Wit's what the vitious fear, the virtuous shun;
 By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.

No troops abroad are so ill disciplin'd as the English;
 which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the vitious example of their leaders. Swift.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.

When vitious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. B. Johnson.

Here from the vitious air and sickly skies,
 A plague did on the dumb creation rise. Dryden.

VITIOUSLY. adv. [from vitious.] Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitious.] Corruptness; state of being vitious.

When we in our vitiousness grow hard,
 The wife gods seal our eyes. Shakespeare.

What makes a governor justly despised is vitiousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue, and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.

VITREOUS. adj. [vitreus, Fr. vitreus, Lat.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray on the Creation.

When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state: this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuete of the an-tients. Arbutnot on Aliments.

VITREOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitreous.] Resemblance of glass.

VITRIFICABLE. adj. [from vitrificate.] Convertible into glass.

TO VITRIFICATE. v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.

We have metals vitrified, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.

VITRIFICATION. n. f. [vitrification, Fr. from vitrificate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.

For vitrification likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrification is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrification will admit of turning back again, and what not? Bacon's Physical Remarks.

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrification of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrification of brick and metals. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrification, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems. Boyle on Colours.

VIV

TO VITRIFY. v. a. [vitrifier, Fr. vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon.

Iron-slag, vitrified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agats. Woodward.

TO VITRIFY. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire; for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass. Arbutnot on Aliments.

VITRIOL. n. f. [vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Lat.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt.

I rubbed it with the vitriol-stone. Woodward.

VITRIOLATE. adj. [vitriolatus, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water. Bacon.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolate corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their occurrences constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolate colour. Boyle.

VITRIOLICK. adj. [vitriolique, Fr. from vitriolum, Lat.] Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

Copperole of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after abluton, be attracted by the loadstone: and therefore whether those flooring salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vitrious spirits fixed unto salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mix'd with a smatch of a vitriolick. Crew's Musaeum.

By over-fermentation, or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity. Feyer.

VITULINE. adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal.

VITUPERABLE. adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blame worthy. Swift.

TO VITUPERATE. v. a. [vituperer, Fr. vituperer, Latin.] To blame; to censure.

VITUPERATION. n. f. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any cavil or vituperation of nature. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VIVACIOUS. adj. [vivax, Lat.]

1. Long-lived.

Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe. Bentley.

2. Spritely; gay; active; lively.

VIVACIOUSNESS. n. f. [vivacitas, Fr. from vivacious.]

VIVACITY. n. f. [vivacitas, Fr. from vivacious.]

1. Liveliness; spiriteliness.

They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity. Boyle.

He had a great vivacity in his countenance. Dryden.

2. Longevity; length of life.

Fables are rais'd concerning the vivacity of deer; for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VIVARY. n. f. [vivarium, Lat.] A warren. Anyworth.

VIVE. adj. [vive, Fr. vivus, Latin.] Lively; forcible; pressing.

By a vive and forcible perswasion, he mov'd him to a war upon Flanders. Bacon.

VIVENCY. n. f. [vivus, Latin.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.

Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and descending constitutions, they are determined by feminilities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VIVES. n. f. A distemper among horses.

Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards; by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears. Farriers Dict.

VIVID. adj. [vividus, Latin.]

1. Lively; quick; striking.

The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again. Boyle.

To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together. Newton.

Ah! what avail his glossy varying dyes?

The vivid green his shining plumes unfold,

His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold. Pope.

2. Spritely;

VIZ

2. Spritely; active.

Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly, vivid faculties to excise and exert themselves in. South.

Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid,
 the power of memory may lose its improvement. Watts.

VIVIDLY. adv. [from vivid.] With life; with quickness;

with strength.

In the moon we can with excellent telescopes discern many hills and vallies, whereof some are more, and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade. Boyle on Colours.

Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind. South.

VIVIDNESS. n. f. [from vivid.] Life; vigour; quickness.

VIVIFIC. adj. [vivificus, Lat.] Giving life.

TO VIVIFICATE. v. a. [vivifico, Lat.]

1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.

2. To recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties.

VIVIFICATION. n. f. [vivification, Fr. from vivifico.] The act of giving life.

If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivisification and figuration. Bacon.

VIVIFIC. adj. [vivificus, Fr. vivificus, Latin.] Giving life;

making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and vivific beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.

TO VIVIFY. v. a. [vivifier, Fr. vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endure with life.

It hath been observed by the antients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would shew, that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Bacon.

Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment. Harvey on Consumptions.

VIVIPAROUS. adj. [vivus and pario, Lat.] Bringing the young alive; opposed to viviparous.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a vivi-parous exclusion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Their species might continue, though they had been vivi-parous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers. Mare's Antidote against Atheism.

If birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them. Ray on the Creation.

VIXEN. n. f.

Vixen or fescen is the name of a she-fox; otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to a fox. Perselegan.

O! when the angry, she's keen and shrewd;

She was a vixen, when she went to school;

And though the be but little, she is fierce. Shakefp.

See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one. Wycherly.

VIZ. n. f. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.]

To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.

That which I oft by sundry writers

Has been apply'd t'almost all fighters,

More justly may b' ascrib'd to this,

Than any other warrior, viz. Hudibras.

None ever acted both parts bolder,

Both of a chieftain and a soldier.

The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with,

is humane voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, form'd by the several motions of the mouth. Holder.

Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing greater or stronger, casting the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition. Dryden's Duffresney.

VIZARD. n. f. [visiere, Fr. See VISOR.] A mask used for disguise.

Let the suits of the maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards are off. Bacon.

Brought vizards in a civil disguise. Roscommon.

A lie is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed,

but can never become it. South.

Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity. Atterb.

He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask, but upon

UMP

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber finish my face. Shakespeare.
Umbre is very sensible and earthy; there is nothing but pure black which can dispute with it. Dryden.
The umbres, ochres, and minerals found in the fiftures, are much finer than those found in the strata. Woodward.
2. A fish. [thymallus, Lat.]
The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pilcher do: but though they may do so in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names. Walt. Angler.
UMBERED, adj. [from umber or umbra, Lat.] Shaded;
clouded.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
UMBRICAL, adj. [umbilical, Fr. from umbilicus, Lat.] Belonging to the navel.
Birds are nourished by umbilical vessels, and the navel is manifest a day or two after exclusion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of carnosous papillae, received into so many fockets of the cotyledons growing on the womb. Didz.
UMBLES, n. f. [umbles, Fr.] A deer's entrails. Didz.
UMBO, n. f. [Latin.] The point, or prominent part of a buckler.
Thy words together ty'd in small hanks,
Close as the Macedonian phalanx;
Or like the umbo of the Romans,
Which fiercest foes could break by no means. Swift.
UMBRAGE, n. f. [umbrage, Fr.]
1. Shade; screen of trees;
O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star, or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton's Par. Lost.
Men sweet'ring run
To grots and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets. Philips.
2. Shadow; appearance.
The rest are umbrages quickly dispell'd; the astrologer
subjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Bramb. against Hobbs.
The opinion carries no shew of truth nor umbrage of reason of its side. Woodward.
Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mals, and collecting of it in another, has misled some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in ore exposed to the air. Woodward on Fossils.
3. Resentment; offence; suspicion of injury.
Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace: and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and prosecution. Bacon.
UMBRAGEOUS, adj. [umbrageous, Fr.] Shady; yielding shade.
Umbrageous grots and caves of cool recess. Milton.
Walk daily in a pleasant, airy, and umbrageous garden. Harvey.
The scaling shower is scarce to patter heard,
Beneath th' umbrageous multitude of leaves. Thomson.
UMBRAGEOUSNESS, n. f. [from umbrageous] Shadiness.
The exceeding umbrageousness of this tree, he compareth to the dark and shadowed life of man; through which the sun of justice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleased Christ to climb the tree of the cross, for our enlight'ning and redemption. Raleigh.
UMBRA'TILE, adj. [umbratilis, Latin.] Being in the shade.
UMBRELL, n. f. [from umbra, Lat.] A screen used in hot UMBRELLA, countries to keep off the sun, and in others to bear off the rain.
I can carry your umbrella, and fan your ladyship. Dryden.
Good housewives
Defended by th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe through the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.
UMBRELLER, n. f. The vior of the helmet. Spenser.
UMBRELLITY, n. f. [umbrellus, Lat.] Shadiness; exclusion of light.
Oiled paper becometh more transparent, and admits the visible rays with much less umbrage. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
UMBRAGE, n. f. [from umbrage] Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.
UMPIRE, n. f. [This word Umpire, with great applause from Shinner, derives from un per, Fr. a father.] An arbitrator; one who, as a common friend, decides disputes.
Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
Twixt my extremes and me, this bloody knife Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that Which the commotion of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring. Shakespeare.
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakespeare.

UNA

The learned Sennertus, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire between them and the peripateticks. Boyle.
The vast distance that sin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God; and this Christ did for us as mediator. South.
The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as from the laws,
You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryden.
UN, A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and α of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.
UNABASHED, adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confuted by modesty.
Earleis on high, stood unabash'd Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.
UNABLE, adj. [from abl.]
1. Not having ability.
The Amalekites set on them, supposing that they had been weary, and unable to resist. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Zeal mov'd thee:
To please thy gods thou didst it; gods unable
To acquit themselves, and prosecute their foes. Milton.
The prince unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair,
And sigh'd, and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden.
I intended to put it in practice, though far unable for the attempt of such a poem. Dryden.
Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Weak; impotent.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakespeare.
UNABOLISHED, adj. [from abolished.] Not repealed; remaining in force.
The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.
UNACCE'PTABLE, adj. [from acceptabile.] Not pleasing; not such as is well received.
The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clarendon.
Tis as indecent as unacceptable, and all men are willing to sink out of such company, the sober for the hazards, and jovial for the unpleasantness. Government of the Tongue.
Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Adair's Preliminary.
If he shrinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers's Sermons.
UNACCE'PTABLENESS, n. f. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.
This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier on Priests.
UNACCE'PTED, adj. [from accept.] Not accepted.
By turns put on the suppliant, and the Lord
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death. Prior.
UNACCE'SSIBLENESS, n. f. [from accessibilis.] State of not being to be attained or approached.
Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccessibleness to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.
UNACCOMMODATED, adj. [from accommodated.] Unfurnished with external convenience.
Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare,
forked animal as thou art. Shakespeare.
UNACCOMPANIED, adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.
Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh un- accompanied with the like. Hayward.
UNACCOMPLISHED, adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.
Beware of death, thou canst not die unpurged,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind. Dryden.
Thy vows are mine.
The gods disdain'd at his approach, withdrew.
Nor durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue. Dryden.
UNACQUAINTABLE, adj. [from acquaintable.]
1. Not explicable; not to be solved by reason; not reducible to rule.
I shall note difficulties, which are not usually observed, though unacquaintable. Glennville.
The folly is to unacquaintable, that enemies pass upon us for friend. L'Estrange.
There has been an unacquaintable disposition of late, to fetch the falshion from the French. Addison.
What

UNA

What is yet more unaccountable, would he complain of their resisting his omnipotence. Rogers's Sermons.
The Chinese are an unaccountable people, strangely compounded of knowledge and ignorance. Baker's Refl. on Learn.
The manner whereby the soul and body are united, and how they are distinguished, is wholly unaccountable to us. Swift.
2. Not subject; not controlled.
UNACQUAINTABLY, adv. Strangely.
The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had so unaccountably melted at the sight of him. Addison.
UNACCURATE, adj. [from accurate.] Not exact.
Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.
UNACCURATENESS, n. f. [from unaccurate.] Want of exact-ness.
It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccuracy and unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.
UNACCU'STOMED, adj. [from accustomed.]
1. Not used; not habituated.
I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Jer. xxxi.
The necessity of air to the molt of animals unaccustomed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.
2. New; not usual.
I'll send one to Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soon keep Tibalt company. Shakespeare.
Their pristine worth
Sweet native home, for unaccustom'd air. Philips.
An old word ought never to be fixed to an unaccustomed idea, without just and evident necessity. Watts's Logic.
UNACKNOWLEDGED, adj. [from acknowledge.] Not owned.
The fear of what was to come from an unknown, at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.
UNACQUAINTANCE, n. f. [from acquaintance.] Want of familiarity; want of knowledge.
The first is an utter unacquaintance with his master's designs, in these words; the servant knoweth not what his master doth. South.
UNACQUAINTED, adj. [from acquainted.]
1. Not known; unusual; not familiarly known.
She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And th' unacquainted light began to fear. Fairy Queen.
2. Not having familiar knowledge.
Festus, an infidel, a Roman, one whose ears were un- acquainted with such matter, heard him, but could not reach unto that whereof he spake. Hooker.
Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet
In the blind mazes of this tangled world? Milton.
Art thou a courtier,
Or I a king? My ears are unacquainted
With such bold truths, especially from thee. Donham.
Youth, that with joys had unacquainted been,
Envy'd grey hairs, that once good days had seen. Dryden.
Let us live like those who expect to die, and then we shall find that we fear'd death only because we were unacquainted with it. Wake's Preparation for Death.
UNACTIVE, adj. [from active.]
1. Not brisk; not lively.
Silly people commend tame, unactive children, because they make no noise, nor give them any trouble. Locke.
2. Having no employment.
Man hath his daily work of body, or mind,
Appointed, which declares his dignity;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their kind God takes no account. Milton.
3. Not busy; not diligent.
His life,
Private, unactive, calm, contemplative;
Little suspicious to any king. Paradise Regain'd.
An homage which nature commands all understandings to pay to virtue; and yet it is but a faint, unactive thing; for in defiance of the judgment, the will may still remain as much a stranger to virtue as before. South's Sermons.
4. Having no efficacy.
In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.
UNACTUATED, adj. Not actuated.
The peripatetic matter is a mere unactuated power. Glennville.
UNADMIR'D, adj. Not regarded with honour.
Oh! had I rather unadmir'd remain'd,
In some lone isle, or distant northern land;
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way. Pope.
UNADORN'D, adj. Not worshipped.
Nor was his name unheard, or unador'd
In antient Greece. Milton.

UNA

UNADORN'ED, adj. Not decorated; not embellished.
The earth, till then
Desert, and bare, unlightly, unadorn'd, Brought forth the tender grass. Milton's Par. Lost.
But hoary winter, unadorn'd and bare,
Dwells in the dire retreat, and freezes there. Addison.
UNADVENTUROUS, adj. Not adventurous.
The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
Irresolute, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
UNADVIS'D, adj.
1. Imprudent; indiscreet.
Madam, I have unadvis'd
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakespeare.
2. Done without due thought; rash.
This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden,
Too like the light'ning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the un- advis'd forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonable alterations. Hayward.
Specifick conformities can be no unadvis'd productions;
but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glennville.
UNADVIS'DLY, adv. Imprudently; rashly; indiscreetly.
A strange kind of speech unto christian ears; and such,
as I hope they themselves do acknowledge unadvis'dly uttered. Hooker.
What man's wit is there able to sound the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvis'dly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution. Hooker.
What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvis'dly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakespeare.
A word unadvis'dly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has rais'd such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.
UNADV'LERATED, adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.
I have only discovered one of those channels, by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and un- adulterated. Addison on the Christian Religion.
UNAFFECTED, n. f.
1. Real; not hypocritical.
They bore the king
To lie in solemn state, a publick sight:
Groans, cries, and howlings fill the crowded place,
And unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face. Dryden.
2. Free from affectation; open; candid; sincere.
The maid improves her charms,
With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,
And sanctity of manners. Addison's Cato.
Of softest manners, unaffected mind;
Lover of peace, and friend of human kind. Pope's Epist.
3. Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.
Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In their majestic, unaffected stile,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.
4. Not moved; not touched.
UNAFFECTEDLY, adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.
He was always unaffectedly cheerful; no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him. Locke.
UNAFFECTING, adj. Not pathetic; not moving the passions.
UNAFFECTED, adj. Free from trouble.
My unaffected mind doth feed
On no unholy thoughts for benefit. Daniel's Misophilius.
UNAGREE'ABLE, adj. Inconsistent; unsuitable.
Advent'rous work! yet to thy pow'r and mine,
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milton.
UNAGREE'ABLENESS, n. f. Unsuitableness to; inconsistency with.
Papias, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine, whose unagreeableness to the gospel oeconomy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostolick man could seduce them. Decay of Piety.
UNADABLE, adj. Not to be helped.
The congregated college have concluded,
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her unadable estate. Shakespeare.
UNADDED, adj. Not assisted; not helped.
Their number, counting those th' unaided eye
Can see, or by invented tubes descry,
The widest stretch of human thought exceeds. Blackmore.
UNAT'ING.

UNA

UNAIMING. adj. Having no particular direction.
The noisy culverin, o'rcharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky:
Such frantick flights are like a madman's dream,
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Granville.

UNA'KING. adj. Not feeling or causing pain.
Shew them th' unaking fears which I would hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

UNA'LIENABLE. adj. Not to be transferred.
Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any un- alienable right in a particular family, but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the ambition of competitors. Swift.

UNALLA'YED. adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.
Unalloyed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

UNALLI'ED. adj.
1. Having no powerful relation.
2. Having no common nature; not congenial.
He is compounded of two very different ingredients, spirit and matter; but how such unalloyed and disproportioned substances should act upon each other, no man's learning yet could tell him. Collier on Pride.

UNALTERABLE. adj. Unchangeable; immutable.
The law of nature, consisting in a fixed, unalterable relation of one nature to another, is indispenfable. South.
They fix unalterable laws,
Settling the same effect on the same cause. Creech.
The truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

UNALTERABLENESS. n. f. Immutability; unchangeableness.
This happens from the unalterableness of the corpufcles, which constitute and compose those bodies. Woodward.

UNALTERABLY. adv. Unchangeably; immutably.
Retain unalterably firm his love intire. Milton's Par. Lost.
The day and year are standard measures, because they are unalterably constituted by those motions. Holder on Time.

UNALTERED. adj. Not changed; not changeable.
It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us intolerable that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered. Hooker.
To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow;
Thy coming hither, though I know thy fcope,
I bid not, or forbid. Paradise Regain'd.
To shew the truth of my unalter'd breast,
Know that your life was giv'n at my request. Dryden.
Since these forms begin, and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they sure depend. Dryden.
Grains and nuts pass often through animals unalter'd. Arbut.
Amongst the shells that were fair, unaltered, and free from such mineral insinuations, there were some which could not be match'd by any species of shell-fish now found upon the sea shores. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

UNAMAZ'ED. adj. Not astonished; free from astonishment.
Though at the voice much marvelling; at length
Not unamaz'd, she thus in answer spake. Milton.

UNAMBITIOUS. adj. Free from ambition.
My humble muse, in unambitious strains,
Paints the green forests, and the flow'ry plains.
I am one of those unambitious people, who will love you forty years hence. Pope.

UNAMENDABLE. adj. [inmendabilis, Lat.] Not to be changed for the better.
He is the same man; so is every one here that you know:
mankind is unamendable. Pope to Swift.

UNAMIALE. adj. Not raising love.
Those who represent religion in an unamiable light, are like the spies sent by Moses, to make a discovery of the land of promise, when, by their reports, they discouraged the people from entering upon it. Addison's Spectator.
These men are so well acquainted with the unamiable part of themselves, that they have not the confidence to think they are really beloved. Addison's Spectator.
Nor are the hills unamiable, whose tops
To heav'n aspire. Philips.

UNANALYSED. adj. Not resolved into simple parts.
Some large crystals of refined and unanalysed nitre, appeared to have each of them fix flat sides. Boyle.

UNANCHORED. adj. Not anchored.
A port there is, inclos'd on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchored, and unt'y'd. Pope.

UNANE'LED. adj. [un and knell.] Without the bell rung.
This sense I doubt.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off ev'n in the blossoms of my fin,
Unhousel'd, unanointed, unanel'd. Shakefp. Hamlet.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.
Look on those half lines as the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs in the Nile, part kindled into life, and part a lump of uninformed, unanimated matter. Dryden.

UNANIMITY. n. f. [unanimitas, Fr.] Agreement in design or opinion.

UNA

An honest party of men acting with unanimitas, are of infinitely greater consequence, than the same party aiming at the same end by different views.

UNANIMOUS. adj. [unanime, Fr. unanimitas, Lat.] Being of one mind; agreeing in design or opinion.
They went to meet
So oft in festivals of joy, and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great fire, Hymning th' eternal father. Milton's Par. Lost.
With those which Minio's fields and Phrygi gave,
All bred in arms, unanimous and brave. Dryden.

UNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from unanimitas.] With one mind.
This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient christian authors. Addison on the Christian Religion.

UNANOT'ED. adj.
1. Not anointed.
2. Not prepared for death by extreme unction.
Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off ev'n in the blossoms of my fin,
Unhousel'd, unanointed, unanel'd. Shakefp. Hamlet.

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refuted.
This is a manifest and unanswerable argument. Ruleigh.
I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glanville.
The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intimate that it was unanswerable. L'Estrange.
These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable. Addison's Spectator.
As to the excuse drawn from the demands of creditors, if it be real, it is unanswerable. Atterbury's Sermons.

UNANSWERABLY. adv. Beyond confutation.
It will put their little logic hard to it, to prove, that there can be any obedience, where there is no command.
And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the forementioned principle plead conscience in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's exprefs command. South.

UNANSWERED. adj.
1. Not opposed by a reply.
Unanswer'd left thou boast. Milton's Par. Lost.
Must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswer'd! Thou'rt a traitor. Addison.

2. Not confuted.
All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answer'd; besides a number of meriments and jests unanswer'd likewise. Hooker.

3. Not suitably returned.
Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPA'LL'ED. adj. Not daunted; not impress'd by fear.
If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquered all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking fo rest unappall'd? Sidney.
Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd;
Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.
As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.
Does this appear like guilt? When thus serene,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fearing. Smith's Phœd. and Hypolitus.

UNAPPA'RELLED. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.
In Peru, though they were an unapparelled people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon's Holy Wars.
Till our souls be unapparelled
Of bodies, they from bliss are banished. Denn.

UNAPPA'RENT. adj. Obscure; not visible.
Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPEASABLE. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.
The unappeasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors, never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Ruleigh's Essays.
I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To prayers than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPEASED. adj. Not pacified.
Sacrifice his flesh, Shakefp.
That to the shadows be not unappeas'd.
His son forgot, his empress unappeas'd; Dryden.
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd.

UNA

UNAPPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.] Such as cannot be applied.
Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unap- plicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.
their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as un- applicable to their purposes as the other. Carendon.
The singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHENDED. adj. Not understood.
They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHENSIVE. adj. [from apprehend.]
1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.
The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others. South.
2. Not suspecting.
UNAPPROACH'ED. adj. Inaccessible.
God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light Dwells from eternity. Milton's Par. Lost.

UNAPPROVED. adj. [from approve.] Not approved.
Evil into the mind
May come and go so unapproved, and leave
No spot behind. Milton.

UNAPT. adj. [from apt.]
1. Dull; not apprehensive.
2. Not ready; not propense.
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep. Shakefp.
My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities. Shakespeare.
3. Unfit; not qualified.
Fear doth grow from an apprehension of deity indued with irresistible power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the unaptest to admit any conference with reason. Hooker.
A longing after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft and wandering, unapt for noble, wise, or spiritual employments. Taylor.

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.
UNAPTLY. adv. [from unapt.] Unfitly; improperly.
He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat: nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Grew.

UNAPTNESS. n. f. [from unapt.]
1. Unsuitableness.
Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions; and their conditions are often governed by their garments: for the person that is gown'd, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unaptness of his weed. Spenser.
2. Dullness; want of apprehension.
That unaptness made you minister
Thus to excuse yourself. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.
The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body, strained by lifting a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unaptness, or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNAR'GUED. adj. [from argue.]
1. Not disputed.
What thou bid'st,
Unargu'd I obey; to God ordains. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Not censured.
Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unargu'd then, and yet hath fame from those. B. Johnson.
To UNARM. v. a. [from arm.] To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.
Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Galen would not leave unto the world too subtle a theory of poisons; unarming thereby the malice of venomous spirits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNARMED. adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: To our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unrelolv'd to beat them back. Shakefp.
He all unarm'd
Shall chafe thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniac holds, possession foul;
These and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.
Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, bane man, unquestiō'd hence to go. Dryden.
Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether unarmed. Grew.

UNARRA'IGNED. adj. Not brought to a trial.

UNA

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

UNARRA'YED. adj. Not dressed.
As if this infant world yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in nature's lap were laid.
Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So hasty and so artless was his grief. Dryden.

UNARTFUL. adj.
1. Having no art, or cunning.
A chearful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. Wanting skill.
How unartful would it have been to have set him in a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him? Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

UNARTFULLY. adv. In an unartful manner.
In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes. Swift's Miscellany.

UNARTIFICIALLY. adv. Contrarily to art.
Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Derham's Physico-Theology.

UNASK'ED. adj. Not sought by solicitation.
With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only My son's the better man. Denham's Sophy.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.
How, or why
Shou'd all conspire to cheat us with a lye?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPIRING. adj. Not ambitious.
To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSA'ILED. adj. Not attacked; not assaulted.
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shakespeare.
I believe
That he, the supreme good, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glistering guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton's Comus.

UNASSAILABLE. adj. Exempt from assault.
In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank, Unshak'd of motion. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

UNASSA'YED. adj. Unattempted.
What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd. Milton.

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.
Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison's Freeholder.
What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory. Rogers's Sermons.

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.
With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd. Dryden.

UNASSUM'ING. adj. Not arrogant.
Unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And died neglected. Thomson's Winter.

UNASSU'RED. adj.
1. Not confident.
The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your presence. Glanville.
2. Not to be trusted.
The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes;
The feigned friends, the unassured foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser.

UNATTA'INABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.
Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattain- able by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation. Dryden's Religio Laici.
I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke.

UNATTA'INABLENESS. n. f. State of being out of reach.
Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or un- attainableness of the good proposed. Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.
He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Sidney.
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, rattleth on the rich. Shakefp.
It

UNA

It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton.
Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjur'd race. Denham.
Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted? Atterb.
UNATTENDED. adj. Having no retinue, or attendants.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shaksp. Macbeth.
With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus. Dryden.
UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.
Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton.
Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her tresses rendering,
Throws off her armlet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain. Dryden.
UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.
Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors. Government of the Tongue.
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive. Tatler, N. 55.
UNATTENDED. adj. Not expiated.
Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unattendant? Reeve.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.
When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is to un- available, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy. Hooker.
UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailable pity show:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailable hands. Pope.
UNAVOIDABLE. adj.
1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.
Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryden.
It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth. Locke.
Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprise, be unavoidable to the best guarded. Rogers.
The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Rogers.
All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoid- able moment, which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.
2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.
That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves: one of them is unavoidable. Tillotson.
I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.
UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.
How can we conceive it subject to material impressions?
and yet the impotency of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Glanville.
UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.
The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.
UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.
We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now. Shaksp.
Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be Their unavoided subject, fewest see. B. Johnson.
UNAUTHORISED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.
To kiss in private?
An unauthorised kiss. Shaksp. Othello.
It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command. Dryden.
UNAWARE. adv. [from aware, or wary.]
UNAWARES. adv. Without thought; without previous meditation.
It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shaksp.
Firm we submit; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unawares. Milton.

UNB

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.
'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopp'd off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not. Pope.
2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.
Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Sponser.
Left destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Psalms xxxvi. 8.
My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyle.
He breaks at unawares upon our walks.
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold. Dryden.
Though we live never so long, we are still surprized: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Wale.
UNAWED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.
The raging and fanatic dissemp of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own,
could have watched other mens. Clarendon.
Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
UNBA'CKED. adj.
1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.
Then I beat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick. Shaksp. Tempest.
A well wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.
They flinch like unback'd fillies. Dennis's Letters.
2. Not countenanced; not aided.
Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd. Daniel's Civil War.
UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.
Let earth unbalanced from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.
UNBALASTED. adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.
They having but newly left those grammatick flats, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamenable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoil'd with their unballast wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton.
As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;
So in the bounding chariot tost'd on high,
The youth is hurly'd headlong through the sky. Addison.
UNBAND. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.
Your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation. Shaksp.
TO UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unblock.
'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd. Denham.
These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war. Dryden.
UNBARRED. adj. [from bar, Lat.] Not shaven. Out of use.
Must I go shew them my unbarred scone?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie? Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.
A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Bacon.
UNBASIFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.
Nor did I with unbasiful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility. Shaksp. Lear.
UNBATED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.
Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire
That he did pace them first? Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
UNBATHED. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.
Fierce Palimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent. Dryden.
UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hid'd to bear their staves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shaksp. Macbeth.
UNBEARING. adj. Bringing no fruit.
Does

UNB

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.
TO UNBAY. v. a. To let open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay
the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris's Miscellany.
UNBEATEN. adj.
1. Not treated with blows.
His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For he had rode five miles unpurr'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.
2. Not trodden.
We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.
If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths. Rescommon.
Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.
UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unfit; indecorous.
Here's our chief guest.—
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast.
And all things unbecoming. Shaksp. Macbeth.
No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton's Par. Lost.
I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecom- ing of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.
My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all. Dryden.
This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison's Freeholder.
Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.
Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.
UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.
If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.
TO UNBED. v. a. To raise from a bed.
Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton's Angler.
UNBESITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.
Love is full of unbesitting trains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shaksp.
Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbesitting holiest place. Milton.
He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects upon terms not at all unbesitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.
TO UNBEG. v. n. To deprive of existence.
Withes each minute he could unbegot
Those rebel sons, who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.
UNBEGOT. adj. [from begot.]
UNBEGOTTEN. adj.
1. Eternal; without generation.
Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillingfleet.
2. Not yet generated.
God omnipotent, must'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shaksp.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton's Par. Lost.
Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South's Sermons.
TO UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.
Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heav'n. Denne.
Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their conjunctory invectives. Howel's Vocal Forest.
UNBENEFIT. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.
These then, though unbenefit in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.
UNBELIEF. n. f.
1. Incredulity.
'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,

UNB

Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimera's, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be, but unbelief is blind. Milton.
I'm justly plagu'd by this your unbelief. Dryden.
And am myself the cause of my own grief.
Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe, or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.
2. Infidelity; irreligion.
Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.
TO UNBELIEVE. v. a.
1. To discredit; not to trust.
Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go. Shaksp.
So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Watson's Buckingham.
2. Not to think real or true.
Nor lets than sight and hearing could convince,
Of such an unforeseen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.
UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.
The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew, what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judg'd thereof as they should. Hooker.
What endless war wou'd jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.
In the new testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers. Tillotson.
He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.
Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers;
but if you would once convince profligates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift's Miscellanies.
UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.
No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Phillips.
This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving
Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.
In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.
Who'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driv'n. Dryden.
TO UNBEND. v. a. To relax; to remit; to ease.
You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shaksp. Macbeth.
It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor's Holy Living.
Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chace by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.
From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.
I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.
UNBENDING. adj.
1. Not suffering flexure.
Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.
2. Devoted to relaxation.
Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Reeve.
UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.
A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit, which inclines men to a fierce, unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers's Sermons.
UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.
More vacant pulpits wou'd more converts make;
All wou'd have latitude enough to take;
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.
UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.
Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompence his distance, in their light
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBENIGN.

U N B

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.
To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In textile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbeneign. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 661.

UNBENT. adj.
1. Not strained by the string.
Apollo heard, and conqu'ring his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.
2. Having the bow unstrung.
Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakep. Cymbeline.
3. Not crushed; not subdued.
But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppos'd. Dryden.
4. Relaxed; not intent.
Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESPEMING. adj. Unbecoming.
No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbecoming myself. K. Charles.
Far be the spirit of the chase from them;
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.

UNBESOURCED. adj. Not treated.
Left heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.
He had now but one son and one daughter unbeflow'd. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.
Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel's Civil War.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

TO UNBEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.] To free from fascination, To UNBLASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.
That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbias'd give its judgment; being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.
The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are consider'd, gain upon sincere, unbias'd minds. Asterbury.
The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.
Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd, or by favour, or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right.

UNBIASSEDLY. adj. Without external influence; without prejudice.
I have sought the true meaning; and have unbias'dly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBID. adj.
1. Uninvited.
Unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone. Shakep.
2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 204.
Roses unbids, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks, to throw thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.
Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBIDDEN. adj. Free from bigotry.
Erasmus, who was an unbidded Roman Catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

TO UNBIND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.
His own woe's author, who bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it willfully unbinds. Fairy Queen.
Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies, and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler, N^o. 55.

TO UNBISHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishop'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBOTTLED. adj. [from bottle.] Unbriddled; unrestrained.
We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal fings, our unbottled lusts; whereof I take this love to be a reel or cyon. Shakep. Othello.

U N B

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.
Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequity of fines and rates. Bacon.
He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That thus unblamable to all befide,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.
Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves. 1 Thess. ii. 10.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.
Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell Long time in peace. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 22.
Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dome rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope's Odyssey.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach;
free from deformity.
O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel, girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth.
Is none worthy to be made a wife. Waller.
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife,
Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.
They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to prelate over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge deputed from desilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblemished proportions on this side the empyreum. Glauville.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any fault.
There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblemish'd majesty:
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEST. adj.
1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.
2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.
What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOODED. adj. Not stained with blood.
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite fear with unbloody beak. Shakep.

UNBLOODY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.
Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage, and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.
Ah! my poor prince! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shakep.

UNBLUNTED. adj. Not becoming obtuse.
A sword, whose weight without a blow might slay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hosts away. Cavoley's Davidist.

UNBODIED. adj.
1. Imcorporeal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and unbodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts's Logic.
2. Freed from the body.
She hath the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burdensome corpse. Spenser.
All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbodiy'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED. adj. Not loden.
A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will arise to a pint boiled. Bacon.

TO UNBOIT. v. a. To let open; to unbar.
I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unboit the gates. Shakep. Troilus and Cressida.

UNBOILED. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flour by bolting or sifting.
I will tread this unboiled villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakep. Lear.

UNBONNETTED. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.
This night, wherein
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbunnetted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakep. K. Lear.

UNBRO'KISH. adj.
1. Not studious of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbrokeish jealousy must contrive
Poor Calio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakep. Othello.

UNBORN. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'd me. Shakep. Richard II.
The woes to come, the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakep.
Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakep. As you like it.
He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton's Par. Lost.
To what wretched fate refer'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wail'd from us? Milton's Par. Lost.
A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.
But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.
In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, sensible qualities, serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

UNBOTTOMED. adj.
1. Without bottom; bottomless.
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.
2. Having no solid foundation.
This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottomed of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependance on his mercy. Hammond.

TO UNBOSOM. v. a.
1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st;
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.
Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Asterbury.
2. To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echo's mild. Milton.

UNBOUGHT. adj.
1. Obtained without money.
The unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden's Horace.
2. Not finding any purchaser.
The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market, which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBOUNDED. adj.
1. Loose; not tied.
2. Wanting a cover.
He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookfeller, who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles; which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.
3. Preterite of unbind.
Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBOUNDED. adj.
1. Infinite; interminable.
Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyag'd the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.
2. Unlimited; unrestrained.
He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakep. Hamlet.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and ex-amin'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBOUNDEDLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.
So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBOUNDEDNESS. n. f. Exemption from limits.
Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBOWED. adj. Not bent.
He knits his brow, and frowns an angry eye,
And passeth with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Shakep. Hen. VI.

U N B

TO UNBOWEL. v. n. To exenterate; to eviscerate.
In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hakewill.
It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowel and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

TO UNBRA'CE. v. a.
1. To loose; to relax.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen, b. 2. c. 4. st. 9.
Somewhat of mournful sure my ears does wound;
Drums unbraced, with soldiers broken cries. Dryden.
Nought shall the ptery and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
Waiting years, that wither human race,
Exhaust thy spirits, and thy arms unbrace. Pope's Iliad.

2. To make the clothes loose.
Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakep. Julius Caesar.
Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakep.

UNBREATHED. v. a. Not exercised.
They now have told their unbreath'd memories,
With this fame play against our nuptials. Shakep.

UNBREATHING. adj. Unanimated.
They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakep.

UNBRED. adj.
1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.
Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad. Gov. of Tongue.
Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, un-towardly tricks. Locke on Education.
Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve's Way of the World.
2. Not taught.
A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBRED'CHED. adj. Having no breeches.
Looking on my boy's face, methoughts I did recoil Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreach'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakep. Winter Tale.

UNBRI'ED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.
The soul gave all;
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.
To succour the distress'd;
Unbri'd by love; untrifled by threats. A. Phillips.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.
This is not well, rash and unbri'dled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakep.
We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbridled excess. Spratt's Sermons.

UNBRIDLED. adj. To what licence
Dares thy unbri'dled boldness run itself? B. Johnson.

UNBRO'KE. adj. [from break.]
1. Not violated.
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me;
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee. Shakep.
Some married persons, even in their marriage, do please God, by preserving their faith unbroke. Taylor.
He first broke peace in heav'n, and faith, till then Unbroke. Milton.
2. Not subdued; not weakened.
From his seat the Pylian prince arose;
Two centuries already he fulfill'd;
And now began the third, unbroken yet. Dryden.
How broad his shoulders spread! by age unbroke! Pope.
3. Not tamed.
A lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroken to the plow. Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE. adj. Ill suiting with the character of a brother.
Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRUISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.
On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakep.
Thou'st years upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the war's furcits, to go rove with one That's yet unbruised. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye;
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unfift brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakep.

UNC

To UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; sitting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakefp.
His stary helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton's Par. Lost.
Laid their bright arms along the fable shore. Pope.
To UNBUILD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakefp.peare.
What will they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton's Par. Lost.
UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.
Built walls you thum, unbuilt you see. Dryden.
UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburi'd yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shakefp.
The moss which groweth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potentially. Bacon.
The hardest ingredient to come by, is the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburi'd. Bacon.
Him double cares attend,
For his unburi'd soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies; and his unburi'd ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.
The wand'ring ghouls
Of king's unburi'd on the wasted coasts. Pope's Statius.
UNBURIED. adj.
1. Not confin'd; not wasted; not injured by fire.
Creon denies the rites of funeral rites to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes;
Unburied, unburi'd, on a heap they lie. Dryden.
2. Not heated with fire.
Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine un-buried. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 898.
UNBURIED. adj. Not confum'd by heat.
What we have said of the unburi'd fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Digby.
To UNBURTHEN. v. a.
1. To rid of a load.
We'll shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl toward death. Shakefp. K. Lear.
2. To throw off.
Sharp Buckingham unburi'd with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shakefp.
3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.
From your love I have a warranty
T' unburi'd all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shakefp.
To UNBUTTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.
Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakefp. Hen. IV.
Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Harvey on Consumptions.
His silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.
UNCALCINED. adj. Free from calcination.
A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it, uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations.
UNCALLED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.
Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncalled, yet at call were ready. Sidney.
He, bolder now, uncalled before her stood. Milton.
Mild Lucina came uncalled, and stood Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.
To UNCALM. adj. To disturb.
What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.
UNCANCELLED. adj. Not erased; not abrogated.
I only mourn my yet uncanceled score;
You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryden.
UNCANONICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.
UNCAPABLE. adj. Incapable, Fr. incapax, Lat. Not capable;
not susceptible.
Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
He who believes himself incapable of pardon, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous

UNC

lous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.
UNCARED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.
Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghostly condition uncared for. Locke.
UNCARNATE. adj. Not fleshly.
Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the incarnate father. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To UNCASE. v. a.
1. To disengage from any covering.
See Pompey is uncasing for the combat. Shakefp.
Thou shalt be matter, Tranio, in my stead.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak. Shakefp.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, was discover'd; and consequently uncased, well laugh'd at, and well cudgell'd. L'Estrange.
Uncase me, and do with me what you please. Addison.
2. To slay.
All men him uncased 'gan deride. Hubbard's Tale.
UNCASED. adj. Not yet caught.
Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncased,
And found dispatch'd. Shakefp. K. Lear.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncased. Gay.
UNCASED. adj. Having no precedent cause.
UNCASED. adj. Not wary; heedless.
Unforeseen, they lay, is unprepared:
Uncaseless Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.
UNCASELESS. adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii. l. 253.
UNCASELESS. adj. Exempt from public reproach.
How difficult must it be for any ruler to live uncaseless, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution? Addison's Freeholder.
Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whose right it is uncaseless to be dull.
To be uncaseless, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope's Letters.
UNCERTAIN. adj. [uncertain, Fr. incertain, Lat.]
1. Doubtful; not certainly known.
That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.
2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.
Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.
Condemned on Caucasus to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Granville.
3. Not sure in the consequence.
I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle gla'ss:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakespeare's Richard III.
Africanus young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim:
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.
In the bright air the fauchion shone,
Or whistling flings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.
The search of our future being, is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.
4. Unsettled; irregular.
As the form of our public service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seem'd best. Hooker.
UNCERTAINED. adj. Made uncertain. A word not used.
The diversity of seasons are not so uncertain'd by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.
UNCERTAINLY. adv. Not surely; not certainly.
They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill: and yet if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham's Sisyph.
Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home.
Names must be of very unsteady meanings, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.
UNCERTAINLY.

UNC

UNCERTAINTY. n. f.
1. Doubtfulness; want of knowledge.
All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things unsecure;
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts.
That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty in the sig-nification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.
2. Contingency; want of certainty.
God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermons.
3. Something unknown.
Our shepherd's care is every man's care, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.
To UNCHAIN. v. a. To free from chains.
Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, lent him to the field:
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromede unchain'd. Prior.
UNCHAINABLE. adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.
If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker, b. iii. §. 10.
UNCHANGED. adj.
1. Not altered.
When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchanged
To hoarse, or mute. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Not alterable.
Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side. Dryden.
Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.
UNCHANGABLENESS. n. f. Immutability.
This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newt.
UNCHANGABLY. adv. Immutably; without change.
All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, being so for ever. South.
Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blackmore.
UNCHANGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.
But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakefp.
True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whatever it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.
To UNCHARGE. v. a. To retract an accusation.
Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakefp. Hamlet.
UNCHARGEABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.
All the rich mines of learning ranack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason sets,
And double edges on our passion fets. Denham.
This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 37.
UNCHARGEABLENESS. n. f. Want of charity.
The penitence of the criminal may have number'd him among the faints, when our untractable uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and un-charitableness. Asterbury.
UNCHARGEABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.
I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or with so uncharitably. Spenser.
Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd. Shakefp.
Men, imprudently and uncharitably o'ten, employ their zeal for persons. Sprat.
UNCHARY. adj. Not wary; not cautious.
I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakespeare.
UNCHASTE. adj. Lewd; libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

UNC

One, that in divers places I had heard before blaz'd, as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.
In my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purpose, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
He hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition. Shakespeare.
Whoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself; and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bridle of all vices. Bacon.
Lust, by unchaste looks,
Lets in defilement to the inward parts. Milton.
If she thinks to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the man will be incurably ruined. Taylor.
UNCHASTITY. n. f. Lewdness; incontinence.
That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.
When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worships families. Arbutnot.
UNCHASTEFULNESS. n. f. Melancholy; gloominess of temper.
Many, by a natural uncheerfulness of heart, love to indulge this uncomfortable way of life. Addison's Spectator.
UNCHECKED. adj. Unrestrained; not fluctuated.
What news on the Ryalto?
—Why, yet it lives there unchecked, that Anthonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.
Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove
Unchecked, and of her roving is no end. Milton.
Thee on the wing thy unchecked vigour bore,
To wanton freely, or securely soar. Smith to J. Phillips.
UNCHECKED. adj. Not masticated.
He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o'er
With uncheck'd morsels, while he churns the gore. Dryden.
To UNCHILD. v. a. To deprive of children.
He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakefp.
UNCHRISTIAN. adj.
1. Contrary to the laws of christianity.
It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.
These unchristian fishers of men, are fatally caught in their own nets. South.
I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.
2. Unconverted; infidel.
Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.

triol, make no apparent alteration. Bacon's Phys. Remarks.

TO UNCLASP. v. a. To open what is shut with clasps.
Thou know'st no less, but all: I have unclasp'd
To thee the book, ev'n of my secret soul. Shakespeare.
Prayer can unclasp the girdles of the north, saying to a mountain of ice, be thou removed hence, and cast into the sea. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCLASSICK. Not classick.
Angel of dulcets, sent to scatter round
Her magic charms o'er all unclassick ground. Pope.

UNCLE. n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The father's or mother's brother.
Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death, than the murder of his father. Shakespeare Illustrated.

UNCLEAN. n. f.
1. Foul; dirty; filthy.
Charon,
A forlorn god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.
Priests are patterns for the rest;
The gold of heav'n, who bear the God impress'd:
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sovereign's image is no longer seen.
If they be foul, on whom the people trust,
Well may the brazen brass contract a rust.
2. Not purified by ritual practices. Dryden.
3. Besides how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, profane?
What agonies must he endure? What difficulties overcome, before he can cleanse himself from the pollutions of sin, and be a fit inhabitant of that holy place, where no unclean thing shall enter? Rogers's Sermons.

4. Lewd; unchaste.
Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why that hour of fairy revel,
In their to sacred paths he dares tread,
In shape profane. Shakespeare Merry Wives of Windsor.
Some tree, whose broad, smooth leaves together fow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new comer, shame,
There fit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

All great, all royal, shine divinely bright.
Blest with temper, whose unclouded rays,
Can make to-morrow cheerful as to-day. Pope.
UNCLOSEDNESS. n. f. Openness; freedom from gloom.
The love I would persuade, makes nothing more conduc-tive to it, than the greatest uncloudedness of the eye, and the perfectest illustration of the object; which is such, that the clearest reason is the most advantageous light it can desire to be seen by. Boyle.

UNCLOUDY. adj. Free from a cloud.
Now night in silent state begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs bestrow th' uncloudy skies;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends.
TO UNCLUTCH. v. a. To open.
If the terrors of the Lord could not melt his bowels, unclutch his gripping hand, or disengage him of his prey; yet sure it must discourage him from grasping of heaven too. Decay of Piety.
TO UNCOIL. v. a. To pull the cap off.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding, and just ready to uncoil one another. Arbutnot and Pope.

An ounce of coined standard silver, must be of equal value to an ounce of uncoined standard silver. Locke.

UNCOLLECTED. adj. Not collected; not recollected.
Adham'd, confus'd, I started from my bed,
And to my soul yet uncollected said;
Into thyself, fond Solomon! return;
Reflect again, and thou again shalt mourn. Prior.

UNCOLOURED. adj. Not stained with any colour, or dye.
Out of things uncoloured and transparent, we can represent unto you all several colours. Bacon.
Whether to deck with clouds the uncolour'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling show'rs;
Rising, or falling, still advance his praise. Milton.

UNCOMBED. adj. Not parted or adjusted by the comb.
They might perceive his head
To be uncombed, and curled, uncombed hairs, Upstarting stiff. Fairy Queen, b. 1. c. 9. ft. 22.
Their locks are beds of uncombed inakes, that wind
About their shady brows in wanton rings. Crowder.
Thy locks uncombed, like a rough wood appear. Dryden.

UNCOMFORTABLE. adj. Inaccessible; unattainable. A low, corrupt word.

UNCOMFORTABLENESS. n. f. Want of grace; want of beauty.
The ruined churches are so unhandfomely patched, and thatched, that men do even shun the places, for the uncom-fortableness thereof. Spenser's Ireland.
He prais'd women's modesty, and gave orderly, well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness. Shakespeare.
Those arches which the Tulcan writers call di terza, and di quarta acuta, because they always concur in an acute angle, both for the natural imbecility of the angle itself, and likewise for their very uncomeliness, ought to be excised from judicious eyes. Watson's Architecture.
Forgetting that duty of modest concealment which they owed to the father of their country, in case they had discovered any real uncomeliness. K. Charles.
The beauty or uncomeliness in good and ill breeding, will make deeper impressions on them, in the examples of others, than from any rules. Locke.

UNC

UNCOMELY. adj. Not comely; wanting grace.
Though he thought inquisitiveness an uncomely guest, he could not but ask who she was. Sidney.
Neither is the fame accounted an uncomely manner of riding: for great warriors say, they never saw a more comely man than the Irishman, nor that cometh on more bravely in his charge. Spenser's Ireland.
Many, who troubled them most in their counsels, durst not go thither, for fear of uncomely affronts. Clarendon.
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson's Autumn.

UNCOMFORTABLE. adj.
1. Affording no comfort; gloomy; dismal; miserable.
He much complaineth of his own uncomfortable exile, wherein he sustained many most grievous indignities, and endured the want of sundry, both pleasures and honours, before enjoyed. Hooker.
Christmas is in the most dead, uncomfortable time of the year, when the poor people would suffer very much, if they had not good cheer to support them. Addison.
Ours is melancholy and uncomfortable portion here below!
A place, where not a day passes, but we eat our bread with sorrow and cares: the present troubles us, the future amazes;
and even the past fills us with grief and anguish. Wake.
The sun ne'er views th' uncomfortable seats,
When radiant he advances or retreats. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Receiving no comfort; melancholy.

UNCOMFORTABLENESS. n. f. Want of cheerfulness.
The want of just dispositions to the holy sacrament, may occasion this uncomfortableness. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCOMFORTABLY. adv. Without cheerfulness.

UNCOMMONDED. adj. Not commanded.
It is easy to see what judgment is to be passed upon all those affected, uncommanded, absurd austerities of the Romish profession. South.

UNCOMMON. adj. Not frequent; not often found or known.
Some of them are uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained. Addison.

UNCOMMONLY. adv. Not frequently; to an uncommon degree.

UNCOMMONNESS. n. f. Infrequency.

Our admiration of the antiquities about Naples and Rome, does not so much arise out of their greatness as uncommonness. Addison.

UNCOMPACT. adj. Not compact; not closely cohering.
These rivers were not streams of running matter; for how could a liquid, that lay hardening by degrees, settle in such a furrowed, uncompact surface? Addison.

UNCOMMUNICATED. adj. Not communicated.
There is no such mutual infusion as really causeth the same natural operations or properties to be made common unto both substances; but whatsoever is natural to deity, the same remaineth in Christ uncommunicated unto his manhood; and whatsoever natural to manhood, his deity thereof is uncapable. Hooker.

UNCOMPANIED. adj. Having no companion.
Thence she fled, unaccompanied, unfought. Fairfax.

UNCOMPASSIONATE. adj. Having no pity.
Neither deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate fire. Shakespeare.
Hero and Leander were drowned in the uncompassionate furies. Sandy's Journey.
If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed;
In uncompassionate anger do not so. Milton's Agonistes.

UNCOMPELLED. adj. Free from compulsion.
The amorous needle, once joined to the loadstone, would never, uncompeled, forsake the enchanting mineral. Boyle.
Keep my voyage from the royal ear,
Nor, uncompeled, the dangerous truth betray,
Till twice six times descends the lamp of day. Pope.

UNCOMPLAINANT. adj. Not civil; not obliging.
A natural roughness makes a man uncomplaining to others, so that he has no deference for their inclinations. Locke.

UNCOMPLEAT. adj. Not perfect; not finished.
Various incidents do not make different fables, but are only the uncompleat and unfinished parts of the same fable. Pope.

UNCOMPOUNDED. adj.
1. Simple; not mixed.
Hardness may be reckoned the property of all uncompounded matter. Newton's Opticks.
Your uncompounded atoms, you Figures in numbers infinite allow;
From which, by various combination, springs
This unconfined diversity of things. Blackmore.
2. Simple; not intricate.
The substance of the faith was comprised in that uncompounded style, but was afterwards prudently enlarged, for the repelling heretical invaders. Hannond's Fundamentals.

UNCOMPREHENDED. adj. Free from comprehension.
We might be furnished with a reply, by setting down the differing weight of our receiver, when emptied, and when full of uncomprested air. Boyle.

UNCOMPREHENSIVE. adj.
1. Unable to comprehend.
2. In Shakespeare it seems to signify incomprehensible.
The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Finds bottom in th' incomprehensible deep. Shakespeare.

UNCONCEIVABLE. adj. Not to be understood; not to be com-prehended by the mind.
In the communication of motion by impulse, we can have no other conception, but of the passing of motion out of one body into another; which is as obscure and unconceivable, as how our minds move or stop our bodies by thought. Locke.
Those atoms wondrous small must be;
Small to an unconceivable degree;
Since though these radiant spoils disperse'd in air,
Do ne'er return, and ne'er the sun repair. Blackmore.

UNCONCEIVABLENESS. n. f. Incomprehensibility.
The unconceivableness of something they find in one, throws men violently into the contrary hypothesis, though altogether as unintelligible. Locke.

UNCONCEIVED. adj. Not thought; not imagined.
Vast is my theme, yet unconceived, and brings Untoward words, scarce loosen'd yet from things. Crichton.

UNCONCERN. n. f. Negligence; want of interest; freedom from anxiety; freedom from perturbation.
Such things had been charged upon us by the malice of enemies, the want of judgment in friends, and the unconcern of indifferent persons. Swift.

UNCONCERNED. adj.
1. Having no interest.
An idle person is like one that is dead, unconcerned in the changes and necessities of the world. Taylor.
The earth's motion is to be admitted, notwithstanding the seeming contrary evidence of unconcerned senses. Clavelle.
It seems a principle in human nature, to incline one way more than another, even in matters where we are wholly unconcerned. Swift.
2. Not anxious; not disturbed; not affected.
See the morn,
All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling. Milton's Par. Lost.
You call'd me into all your joys, and gave me
An equal share; and in this depth of misery
Can I be unconcerned? Denham's Sophy.
The virgin from the ground
Upstart fresh, already clos'd the wound;
And unconcern'd for all she felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore. Dryden.
Happy mortals, unconcern'd for more,
Confin'd their wishes to their native shore. Dryden.
We shall be easy and unconcerned at all the accidents of the way, and regard only the event of the journey. Rogers.

UNCONCERNEDLY. adv. Without interest or affection; without anxiety; without perturbation.
Not the most cruel of our conquering foes,
So unconcern'dly can relate our woes,
As not to lend a tear. Denham.
Death was denounc'd, that frightful sound,
Which ev'n the best can hardly bear:
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grieved challenger. Dryden.
Is heaven, with its pleasures for evermore, to be parted with so unconcernedly? Is an exceeding and eternal weight of glory too light in the balance against the hopeless death of the atheist, and utter extinction. Bentley.

UNCONCERNEDNESS. n. f. Freedom from anxiety, or perturbation.
No man, having done a kindness to another, would think himself justly dealt with, in a total neglect, and unconcernedness of the person who had received that kindness. South.

UNCONCERNING. adj. Not interesting; not affecting; not belonging to one.
Things impossible in their nature, or unconcerning to us, cannot beget it. Decay of Piety.
The science of medals, which is charged with so many unconcerning parts of knowledge, and built on such mean materials, appears ridiculous to those that have not examined it. Addison on Antient Medals.

UNCONCERNMENT. n. f. The state of having no share.
Being privileged by an happy unconcernment in those legal murders, you may take a sweeter relish of your own innocence. South.

UNC

Either may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccuracy and the unconvincingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

UNCONCOCTED. adj. Not digested; not matured. Boyle.

We swallow cherry-stones, but void them unconcocted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In theology, I put as great a difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an unconcocted, evanid meteor. Glanville.

Did she extend the gloomy clouds on high,
Where all th' amazing fireworks of the sky,
In unconcocted seeds fermenting lie. Blackmore.

UNCONDEMNED. adj. Not condemned. Blackmore.

It was a familiar and uncondemned practice amongst the Greeks and Romans, to expose, without pity, their innocent infants. Locke.

UNCONDITIONAL. adj. Absolute; not limited by any terms. Locke.

O pass not, Lord! an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional;
But in thy sentence our remorse foresee,
And, in that foresight, this thy doom recal. Dryden.

Our Saviour left a power in his church to absolve men from their sins; but this was not an absolute and unconditional power vested in any, but founded upon repentance, and on the penitent's belief in him alone. Ayliffe's Parergon.

UNCONFINED. adj.

- Free from restraint. Shakespeare.
- That shews thou art unconfin'd. Shakespeare.
- Chaucer has refined on Boccaccio, and has mended the stories he has borrowed: though prose allows more liberty of thought, and the expression is more easy when unconfin'd by numbers. Our countryman carries weight, and yet wins the race at disadvantage. Dryden.
- Poets, a race long unconfin'd and free,
Still fond and proud of savage liberty,
Receiv'd his laws. Pope's Essay on Criticism.
- Having no limits; unbounded. Pope's Essay on Criticism.
- If that which men esteem their happiness, were, like the light, the same sufficient and unconfin'd good, whether ten thousand enjoy the benefit of it, or but one, we should see men's good will and kind endeavours would be as universal. Spektator, N^o. 601.
- Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and human kind. Pope.
- UNCONFINABLE. adj. Unbounded. Pope.

UNCOUTH. adj. [uncult, Saxon.] Odd; strange; unusual.
A very uncouth sight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace;
For as he forward mov'd his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Fairy Queen.
The lovers standing in this doleful wife,
A warrior bold unwarlike approached near,
Uncouth in arms yclad, and strange disguise. Fairfax.
I am surpriz'd with an uncouth fear;
A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Shaksp.
The trouble of thy thoughts this night
Affects me equally; nor can I like
This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear. Milton.
Say on;
For I that day was absent, as befel,
Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obscure,
Far on excursion toward the gates of hell. Milton.
It was so uncouth a sight, for a fox to appear without a tail, that the very thought made him weary of his life. L'Estrange.
The secret ceremonies I conceal. Dryden.
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal.
I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unpossessed by doctors of my sect, whose reasonings will of course make all chime that way, and make the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.
He made that a pleasant study, which, in the hands of Bartolus and Baldus, was uncouth and rugged. Baker.

UNCOUTHLY. adv. Oddly; strangely.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind bestride. Dryden.

UNCOUTHNESS. n. f. Oddness; strangeness.
To deny himself in the lesser instances, that so when the greater come, they may not have the disadvantage of uncouthness, and perfect strangeness, to enhance their difficulty, must be acknowledged reasonable. Decay of Piety.

to deprive of existence.
Who created thee, lamenting learn;
Who can uncreate thee thou shalt know. Milton.
Light dies before her uncreating word.
Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope's Dunciad.

UNCREATED. adj.
1. Not yet created.
How hast thou disturb'd Heav'n's blessed peace, and into nature brought Mystery, uncreated till the crime
Of thy rebellion? Milton.
2. [Incrée, Fr.] Not produced by creation.
What cause within, or what without is found,
That can a being uncreated bound?
The next paragraph proves, that the idea we have of God is God himself; it being something, as he says, un- created. Locke.

UNC

UNCREDITABLENESS. n. f. Want of reputation.
To all other dissuaves, we may add this of the uncred- itableness: the best that can be said is, that they use wit foolishly, whereof the one part devours the other. Dix. of Piety.

UNCROPPED. adj. Not cropped; not gathered.
Thy abundance wants
Partakers, and uncropp'd falls to the ground. Milton.

With frank, and with uncur'd plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind. Shaksp. Hen. V.

TO UNCURL. v. a. To loose from ringlets, or convolutions.
There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in forms; but when 'tis clear, Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. Dryden.
The lion's foe lies prostrate on the plain,
He sheaths his paws, uncurls his angry mane;
And, pleas'd with bloodless honours of the day,
Walks over, and disdains th' inglorious prey. Dryden.
The furies sink upon their iron beds,
And snakes uncurl'd hang list'ning round their heads. Pope.

TO UNCURL. v. n. To fall from the ringlets.
My fleece of woolly hair now uncurl,
Even as an adder, when the doth unroll
To do some fatal execution? Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

UNCURLED. adj. Not collected into ringlets.
Alike in feature both, and garb appear;
With honest faces, though uncurled hair. Dryden.
But fines, alas! frail beauty must decay;
Cur'd or uncur'd, since locks will turn to grey;
What then remains, but well our pow'r to use,
And keep good humour still, whatever we lose? Pope.

UNCURRENT. adj. Not current; not passing in common payment.
Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, is not crack'd within the ring. Shaksp. Hamlet.
I can no other answer make but thanks;
And thanks, and ever thanks: and oft good turns
Are shuffl'd off with such uncurrent pay. Shaksp. Lear.

TO UNCURE. v. a. To free from any excretion.
Uncure their souls; their peace is made
With head, and not with hands. Shaksp. Richard II.

any language or secret imprecation of mine, not long after pays his own and his eldest son's heads. K. Charles.
Heav'n sure has kept this spot of earth uncurst,
To show how all things were created first. Waller.

UNCUT. adj. Not cut.
We must resign! heav'n his great soul doth claim,
In forms as loud as his immortal fame:
His dying groans, his last breath shake our isle,
And trees uncut fall for his funeral pile. Waller.

TO UNDA'M. v. a. To open; to free from the restraint of mounds.
When the fiery funts too fiercely play,
And shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay;
The wary ploughman on the mountain's brow,
Undamn his weary stores. Dryden's Georgicks.

UNDAMAG'D. adj. Not made worse; not impaired.
Plants will frequent changes try,
Undamag'd, and their marriageable arms
Conjoin with others. Philips.

UNDAM'TED. adj. Unsubdued by fear; not depressed.
Bring forth men children only;
For thy undam'ted metal should compose Nothing but males. Shaksp. Macbeth.
With him went
Harman, who did the twice fir'd Harry save,
And in his burning ship undam'ted fought.
Mirror of ancient faith in early youth!
Undam'ted worth, inviolable truth!
No foe unpunish'd in the fighting field,
Shall dare thee. Dryden.

UNDAM'TEDNESS. n. f. Boldness; bravery; intrepidity.
Luther took up a briske air of assurance, and shewed a particular undam'tedness in the cause of truth, when it had so mighty an opposer. Atterbury.
The art of war, which they admired in him, and his un- dam'tedness under dangers, were such virtues as these islanders were not used to. Pope.

UNDAM'TEDLY. adv. Boldly; intrepidly; without fear.
It shall bid his foul go out of his body undam'tedly, and lift up its head with confidence, before faints and angels. South.

I sheath again undeeded. Shaksp. Macbeth.

UNDEFA'CED. adj. Not deprived of its form; not disfigured.
Those arms, which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antick stone engrav'd;
Now torn by mortars, stand yet undefac'd,
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd. Glanville.

UNDEFEASIBLE. adj. Not defeasible; not to be vacated or annulled.
Virtue weareth a crown for ever, having gotten the victory, striving for undefiled rewards. Wisd. iv. 3.
Whose bed is undefil'd, and chaste, pronounce'd, Milton.
Her Arethufian stream remains unsoil'd;
Unmix'd with foreign filth, and undefil'd;
Her wit was more than man, her innocence a child. Dryden.

UNDEFIN'D. adj. Not circumscribed, or explained by a definition.
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round with legions of obscure, doubtful, undefin'd words. Locke.

UNDEFINABLE. adj. Not to be marked out, or circumscribed by a definition.

UND

That which is indefinite, though it hath bounds, as not being infinite, yet those bounds to us are undefinable. Grew.
 Why simple ideas are undefinable is, that the several terms of a definition, signifying several ideas, they can all, by no means, represent an idea, which has no composition at all. Locke.
UNDEFORMED. adj. Not deformed; not disfigured.
 The sight of so many gallant fellows, with all the pomp and glare of war, yet undeform'd by battles, may possibly invite your curiosity. Pope.
UNDEFIED. adj. Not set at defiance; not challenged.
 False traitor, thou broken haif
 The law of arms, to strike foe undefied;
 But thou thy treason's fruit, I hope, shalt taste
 Right thy, and feel the law, the which thou hast de-

We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distress'd. Milton.
Were men so dull, they could not see
That Lyce painted, should they flee,
Like simple birds, into a net,
So grossly woven and ill-fet;
Her own teeth would undo the knot,
And let all go that she had got. Waller.
3. To change any thing done to its former state; to recall, or annul any action.
They may know, that we are far from presuming to think that men can better any thing which God hath done, even as we are from thinking, that men should presume to undo some things of men, which God doth know they cannot better. Hooker.
It was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo. Shakespeare's Tempest.
We seem ambitious God's whole work to undo;
Of nothing he made us, and we strive too,
To bring ourselves to nothing back. Denham.

Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome. Shakespeare.
Some said it was best to fight with the Turks in that uneven, mountain country, where the Turks chief strength consisting in the multitude of his horsemen, should stand him in small stead. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
They made the ground uneven about their nest, inasmuch that the flat did not lie flat. Addison.
2. Not fitting each other; not equal.
The Hebrew verse consists of uneven feet. Peacocks.
UNEVENNESS, n. f.
1. Surface not level; inequality of surface.
This softness of the foot, which yields to the ruggedness and unevenness of the roads, renders the feet less capable of being worn, than if they were more solid. Ray on the Creation.
That motion which can continue long in one and the same part of the body, can be propagated a long way from one part to another, supposing the body homogeneous; so that the

UNE

- motion may not be reflected, refracted, interrupted or disordered by any unevenness of the body. Newton.
2. Turbulence; changeable state.
Edward II. though an unfortunate prince, and by reason of the troubles and unevenness of his reign, the very law itself had many interruptions; yet it held its current in that state his father had left it in. Hale.
3. Not smoothness.
Notwithstanding any such unevenness or indistinctness in the style of those places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
UNEVITABLE, adj. [intrans., Lat. inevitabilis, Fr.] Inevitable; not to be escaped.
So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the unevitable Philoclea, but that her unwilful presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.
UNEVICTED, adj. Not exacted; not taken by force.
All was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free, to give her unevicted birth. Dryden.
UNEVINCED, adj. Not enquired; not tried; not discussed.
Yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd Untainted, unevinc'd, free at liberty. Shakespeare.
They utter all they think, with a violence and indisposition, unevinc'd, without relation to person, place, or fitness. B. Johnson.
The most pompous seeming knowledge, that is built on the unevinc'd prejudices of sense, stands not. Glaville.
UNEVINCED, adj. Not known by any precedent or example.

This being a new, unexemplified kind of policy, must pass for the wisdom of this particular age, scorning the examples of all former ages. South.
UNEXERCISED, adj. Not practised; not experienced.
Messias, with his ardour, warms
A heartless train, unexercis'd in arms. Dryden.
Abstract ideas are not so obvious to the yet unexercis'd mind, as particular ones. Locke.
UNEXEMPT, adj. Not free by peculiar privilege.
You invert the covenants of her trust,
And harshly deal like an ill borrower, who takes flow
With that which you receiv'd on other terms,
Scorning the unexempt condition. Shakespeare.
By which all mortal frailty must subsist. Milton.
UNEXHAUSTED, adj. [intrans., Lat.] Not spent; not drained to the bottom.
What avail her unexhausted stores?
While proud oppression in her vallies reigns. Addison.
UNEXPANDED, adj. Not spread out.
Every fetus bears a secret hoard;
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd. Blackmore.
UNEXPECTED, adj. Not thought on; sudden; not provided against.
Have wisdom to provide always beforehand, that those evils overtake us not, which death unexpected doth use to bring upon careless men; and although it be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden. Hooker, b. v. §. 46.
Sith evils, great and unexpected, do cause oftentimes even them to think upon divine power with fearfulest suspicions, which have been otherwise the most sacred adorers thereof; how should we look for any constant resolution of mind in such cases, saving only where unfeigned affection to God, hath bred the most assured confidence to be assisted by his hand? Hooker, b. v. §. 1.

UNE

O unexpected stroke! worse than death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton's Par. Lost.
Them unexpected joy surpriz'd,
When the great enigm of Messiah blaz'd. Milton.
Their unexpected loss and plaints out-breath'd. Milton.
Some amazement;
But such as sprung from wonder, not from fear,
It was so unexpected. Denham's Sophy.
To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,
And turn'd him to his unexpected foe. Dryden.
When Barcelona was taken by a most unexpected accident of a bomb lighting on the magazine, then the Catalonians revolted. Swift.
UNEXPECTEDLY, adv. Suddenly; at a time unthought of.
Oft he seems to hide his face,
But unexpectedly returns. Milton's Agonistes.
A most bountiful present, when I was most in want of it, came most seasonably and unexpectedly to my relief. Dryden.
If the concernment be poured in unexpectedly upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
You have fairer warning than others, who are unexpectedly cut off. Wake.
My heart was filled with a deep melancholy, to see several dropping unexpectedly in the midst of mirth. Addison.
Though you went away so unexpectedly, yet we have informed ourselves of every thing that hath happened to you. Gay.

manner.
He describes the unexpectedness of his appearance. Watts.
UNEXPERIENCED, adj. Not veried; not acquainted by trial or practice.
The wisest, unexperienced, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous. Milton.
Long use may strengthen men against many such inconveniences, which, to unexperienced persons, may prove very hazardous. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
The pow'rs of Troy;
Not a raw and unexperienced train,
But a firm body of embattl'd men. Dryden.
These reproaches are the extravagant speeches of those un- experienced in the things they speak against. Tillotson.
Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another. Locke.
The smallest accident intervening, often produces such changes, that a wife man is just as much in doubt of events, as the most ignorant and unexperienced. Swift.
UNEXPE'DIENT, adj. Inconvenient; not fit.
The like would not be unexpedient after meat, to assist and cherish nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good tune. Milton on Education.
UNEXPERT, adj. [inexpertus, Lat.] Wanting skill or knowledge.
Receive the partner of my inmost soul:
Him you will find in letters, and in laws
Not unexpert. Prior.
UNEXPLORED, adj.
1. Not searched out.
Oh! say what stranger cause, yet unexplored,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.
2. Not tried; not known.
Under thy friendly conduct will I fly,
To regions unexplored. Dryden.
UNEXPRESSED, adj. Not laid open to censure.
They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best treatise, rather than suffer the little mistakes of the author to pass unexpressed. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
UNEXPRESSIBLE, adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.
What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a confidence of its own innocence. Tillotson.
UNEXPRESSIVE, adj.
1. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural and analogical signification.
2. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed.
Improper, and out of use.
Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste, and inexpressive the. Shakespeare.
With nectar pure his ouzy locks he laves,
And hears the inexpressive, nuptial song.
In the blest kingdoms, meek, of joy and love. Milton.
The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks, with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With inexpressive notes to heaven's new-born heir. Milton.
UNEXTENDED, adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.
How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle? Locke.

UNF

UNEXTINGUISHABLE, adj. [inextinguibile, Fr.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.
Pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.
What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth? Bentley.
UNEXTINGUISHED, adj. [inextinctus, Lat.]
1. Not quenched; not put out.
The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
Ev'n o'er your cold, your ever-fac'd urn,
His constant flame, shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyttleton.
2. Not extinguishable.
An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.
UNFA'DED, adj. Not withered.
A lovely flower,
Unfaded yet, but yet unfed below,
No more to mother earth, or the green stem shall owe. Dryd.

For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes. Pope.
UNFA'ILING, adj. Certain; not missing.
Nothing the united voice of all history proclaims so loud, as the certain, unfailing curse, that has purged and overtook sacrilege. South's Sermons.
Thou, secure of my unfailing word,
Compose thy swelling soul, and sheath the sword. Dryden.
UNFA'IR, adj. Disingenuous; subdulous; not honest.
You come, like an unfair merchant, to charge me with being in your debt. Swift.
UNFA'ITHFUL, adj.
1. Perfidious; treacherous.
If you break one jot of your promise, I will think you the most atheistical break-promise, and the most unworthy, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the un- faithful. Shakespeare.
My feet, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height. Pope.
2. Impious; infidel.
Thence shall come
To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNFA'ITHFULLY, adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.
There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled; and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.
UNFA'ITHFULNESS, n. f. Treachery; perfidiousness.
As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.
UNFA'LOWED, adj. Not followed.
Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores
Of golden wheat. Philips.

of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts's Logic.
UNFA'ISHONABLENESS, n. f. Deviation from the mode.
Natural unfashionableness is much better than apish, affected postures. Locke.
UNFA'ISHED, adj.
1. Not modified by art.
Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
And yet there is something roughly noble there;
Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,
And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.
2. Having no regular form.
A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,
Of jarring seeds, and jostly chaos nam'd. Dryden.
UNFA'ISHONABLY, adv. [from unfashionable.]
1. Not according to the fashion.
2. Unartfully.
Deform'd, unfashion'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up;
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
To UNFA'STEN, v. a. To loose; to unfix.
He had no sooner unfastened his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney, b. ii.

UNF

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend. Shakespeare.
Then in the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron, or solid rock, with ease Unfastens. Milton's Par. Lost. b. ii. l. 876.
UNFA'THERED, adj. Fatherless; having no father.
They do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakespeare.

 What we, not to explore the secrets, ask
 Of his eternal empire. Milton's Par. Lost.
 These are the unforbidden trees; and here we may let loose the reins, and indulge our thoughts. Norris.
 A good man not only forbears those gratifications, which are forbidden by reason and religion, but even refrains himself in unforbidden influences. Atterbury.

UNF

UNFORBIDDENNESS, n. f. The state of being unforbidden.
 The bravery you are so severe to, is no where expressly prohibited in scripture; and this unforbiddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful. Boyle.
 UNFORCED, adj.
 1. Not compelled; not constrained.
 This gentle and unforced accord of Hamlet Sits smiling to my heart. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Unforced by punishment, unaw'd by fear;
 His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.
 2. Not impelled.
 No more can impure man retain and move
 In that pure region of a worthy love,
 Than earthly substance can, unforced, aspire,
 And leave his nature to converse with fire. Dante.
 3. Not feigned.
 Upon these tidings they broke forth into such unforced and unfeigned passions, as it plainly appeared that good-nature did work in them. Hayward.
 4. Not violent.
 Windsor the next above the valley swells

UNGRA'CEFUL. adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.
Raphael answer'd heav'n,
Nor are thy lips ungraceful, fire of men. Milton.

A solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be constrained, uneasy, and ungrace-ful. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the first learning is but an incumbrance; and without the last is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRA'CEFULNESS. n. f. Inelegance; awkwardness.
To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain; and what is so plaitered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRA'CIOUS. adj.
1. Wicked; odious; hateful.
He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,
Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong. Spenser.

I'll in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the fight
Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Shew me the steep and thorny way to heav'n;
Whilst he, a pure and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

To the gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known;
Th' audacious trumpet, and ungracious son. Dryden.

No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.

2. Making no returns for culture.
Most when driv'n by winds, the flaming storm
Of the long files destroys the beauteous form;
Nor will the wither'd stock be green again;
But the wild olivehuts, and shades th' ungrateful plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing; unacceptable.
It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action so full of danger. Clarendon.

What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Atterbury.

UNGRA'TEFULLY. adv.
1. With ingratitude.
When call'd to distant war,
His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here:
Oriana's eyes that glorious conquest made;
Nor was his love ungratefully repaid. Glanville.

We often receive the benefit of our prayers, when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Wake.

2. Unacceptably; unpleasing.
UNGRA'TEFULNESS. n. f.

1. Ingratitude; ill return for good.
Can I, without the detestable stain of ungratefulness, abstain from loving him, who, far exceeding the beautifulness of his shape with the beautifulness of his mind, is content so to abate himself as to become Demetrius's servant for my sake. Sidney.

2. Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.
UNGRA'VELY. adv. Without seriousness.

His present portance
Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakespeare.

UNGROU'NDED. adj. Having no foundation.
Ignorance, with an indifference for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.

This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational.
For upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? South.

UNGRU'DINGLY. adv. Without ill will; willingly; heartily; cheerfully.

If, when all his art and time is spent,
He lay 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,
Because he is the mouth of destiny. Donne.

UNGUARDED. adj.

UNGUARDED. adj.

The throne of God unguarded, and his tide Abandon'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi. l. 133.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy resort;
To see the slighted camp, the vacant port. Denham.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. Careless; negligent.
All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her prayers, nor sleep?
Or have not gold and flattery pow'r,
To purchase one unguarded hour? Prior.

With an unguarded look the now devour'd
My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh. Prior.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. Pope.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives? Rogers.

UNGU'RD. adj. Not directed; not regulated.
The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, th' unguided days,
And rotten times that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shakespeare.

Can unguided matter keep itself to such exact conformi-ties, as not in the least spot to vary from the species? Glanville.

They resolve all into the accidental, unguided motions of blind matter. Locke.

Nature, void of choice,
Does by unguided motion things produce,
Regardless of their order. Blackmore on the Creation.

UNGU'NT. n. f. [unquantum, Lat.] Ointment.

hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Holder.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, unhabitable, or extremely hot. Roy.

UNHAB'CKED. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.

With a blessed, and unrev'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruist,
We will bear home that luffy blood again. Shakespeare.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our target undented. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

To UNH'ALLOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to defecate.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit;
Profan'd first by the serpent; by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton.

The vanity *unhallow*s the virtue. L'Estrange.

This one vice left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNH'ALLOWED. adj. Unholy; profane.
Thy curst spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter:
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;
And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam Inus'd itself in thee. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that that jugler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, pranc'd in reason's garb. Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

 1. Profane; not hallowed.
 Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unbelly'd, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.
 2. Impious; wicked.
 We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it; so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unbelly'd, because we submit ourselves unto that, which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.
 From the paradise of God,
 Without remorse, drive out the sinful pair,
 From hallow'd ground thy unbelly'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
 Far other raptures of unbelly'd joy. Pope.

 Unbelly'd thy virgin soul from her fair biding place. Milton.
 UNHOUSED. adj.
 1. Homeless; wanting a house.
 Call the creatures,
 Whose naked natures live in all the spight
 Of weakful heav'n; whose bare, unbelly'd trunks,
 To the conflicting elements expos'd,
 Answer meer nature. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
 2. Having no settled habitation.
 But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
 I would not my unbelly'd, free condition
 Put into circumscription and confine. Shakesp. Othello.
 Hear this.
 You unbelly'd, lawless, rambling libertines. Southern.
 UNHOUSED. adj. Having not the sacrament.
 This was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
 Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
 Cut off even in the blossoms of my fun,
 Unbelly'd, unanointed, unanell'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.
 UNHUMBL'D. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.
 Should I of these the liberty regard,
 Who, freed as to their ancient patrimony,
 Unhumbled, unrepeated, unreformed,
 Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
 UNHURT. adj. Free from harm.
 Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field;
 and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Bacon's War with Spain.

 I walk in air. Dryden's State of Innocence.
 Supported by thy care,
 Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
 And breath'd in tainted air. Addison's Spectator.
 The stars shall fade away;
 But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
 Unbelly'd, amidst the war of elements.
 The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.
 UNHURTFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.
 You hope the duke will return no more, or
 You imagine me too unbelly'd an opposit. Shakespeare.
 Flames unbelly'd, hovering, dance in air. Blackmore.
 UNHURTFULLY. adv. Without harm; innocently.
 We laugh at others as innocently and as unbelly'd, as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.
 UNICORN. n. f. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Lat.]
 1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.
 Went thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
 Unicorns may be betray'd with trees. Shakespeare.
 Bears with glasses, men with flatterers.
 Nature in comigerous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 It is not of consequence, that because Diocorides hath made no mention of unicorns horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those naticornous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.
 Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
 Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.
 2. A bird.
 Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the dunghill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness, as the unicorn is pictured;
 spur'd on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.
 UNIFORM. adj. [unus and forma.]

 Though when confusedly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never to uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different. Woodward.
 2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.
 The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.
 Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.
 Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Hooker.
 UNIFORMITY. n. f. [uniformité, Fr.]
 1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.
 There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

UNI

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steadiness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.
 2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.
 The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, con-sisteth in that uniformity, which all the several persons there-unto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord, whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker, b. iii.
 UNIFORMLY. adv. [from uniform.]
 1. Without variation; in an even tenour.
 That faith received from the apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as fast, as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker, b. v.
 The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the aethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton's Opticks.
 2. Without diversity of one from another.
 UNIMAGINABLE. adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy;
 not to be conceived.
 Things to their thought
 So unimaginable, as hate in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The skilful organist plies his grave-fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony, with artful and unimaginable touches, adorns and graces the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.
 An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is utterly unimaginable. Tillotson.
 UNIMAGINABLY. adv. To a degree not to be imagined.
 Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpuscles, that make up the beams of light. Boyle.
 UNIMITABLE. adj. [inimitable, Fr. inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.
 Both these are unimitable. Burnet's Theory of the Earths.
 UNIMORTAL. adj. Not immortal; mortal.
 They took them several ways,
 Both to destroy, or unimortal make. Milton.
 All kinds.
 UNIMPAIRABLE. adv. Not liable to waste or diminution.
 If the superior be unimpaired, it is a strong presumption, that the inferiors are likewise unimpaired. Hooker.
 UNIMPAIRED. adj. Not diminished; not worn out.
 Yet unimpaired with labours, or with time,
 Your age but seems to a new youth to climb. Dryden.
 If our silver and gold diminishes, our publick credit continues unimpaired. Addison on the State of the War.

No uninformed minds can represent virtue so noble to us, that we necessarily add splendour to her. Pope.

2. Unanimated; not enlivened.

UNINGENUOUS, adj. Illiberal; disingenuous.

Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskillful, as it is un- ingenuous. Decay of Piety.

UNINHABITABLE, adj. Unfit to be inhabited.

If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed un- inhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropics. Raleigh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain
All the collected treasures of the main;
The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water flood,
To man an uninhabitable flood. Blackmore.

UNINHABITABLENESS, n. f. Incapacity of being inhabited.

Divers radicated opinions, such as that of the uninhabitable- ness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request. Boyle.

UNINHABITED, adj. Having no dwellers.

The whole island is now uninhabited. Sandys.

UNINHABITABLE, adj. Uninhabited, until'd, unfown.

It lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone. Pope.

I cast anchor on the lee side of the island, which seemed to be uninhabited. Gulliver's Travels.

UNINJURED, adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.

You may as well spread out the unform'd heaps
Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe; as bid me hope
Danger will let a helpless maiden pass,
Uninjur'd in this wild, surrounding waste. Milton.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness
Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss;
Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,
As thy own fame among the future just. Prior.

UNINSCRIPTIONED, adj. Having no inscription.

Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known;
Obscure the place, and uninstruct'd the stone. Pope.

UNINSPIRED, adj. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.

Thus all the truths that men, uninspired, are enlightened with, came into their minds. Locke.

My pastoral muse her humble tribute brings,
And yet not wholly uninspir'd she sings. Dryden.

UNINSTRUCTED, adj. Not taught; not helped by institution.

That fool intrudes, raw in this great affair,
And uninstructed how to stem the tide. Dryden.

It will be a prejudice to none but widows and orphans, and others uninstructed in the arts and management of more skillful men. Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes; though there are even in these parts, several poor, uninstructed persons. Addison.

Though we find few amongst us, who profess themselves Anthropomorphites, yet we may find, amongst the ignorant and uninstructed christians, many of that opinion. Locke.

UNINSTRUCTIVE, adj. Not conferring any improvement.

Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive. Addison.

UNINTELLIGENT, adj. Not knowing; not skillful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of our insinuation. Shakspeare's Winter Tale.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar. Glanville.

This conclusion, if men allow'd of, they would not destroy ill-formed productions. Ays, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untractable changeling be? Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd
An author unintelligent and blind;
When ours proceed from choice? Blackmore.

The obvious products of unintelligent nature. Bentl.

UNINTELLIGIBILITY, n. f. Quality of not being intelligible.

Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion. Glanville.

If we have truly proved the unintelligibility of it in all other ways, this argumentation is undeniable. Burnet.

UNINTELLIGIBLE, adj. [unintelligibilis, Fr.] Not such as can be understood.

The Latin, three hundred years before Tully, was as un- intelligible in his time, as the English and French of the same period are now. Swift.

Did Thetis
These arms thus labour'd for her son prepare;
For that dull soul to stare with stupid eyes,
On the learn'd unintelligible prize! Dryden.

ness of a little pin. Greul's Myology.

UNION, n. f. [unio, Lat.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul in both! Milton's Par. Lost.

One kingdom, joy, and union without end. Milton.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union; but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen.
VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is perpetual, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. Caval.

UNIPAROUS, adj. [unus and pario.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown's Vulgar Errata.

UNISON.

UNI

UNISON, adj. [unus and sonus, Lat.] Sounding alone.

Sounds intermix'd with voice

Choral, or unison. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

UNISON, n. f.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that, from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round. Dunciad, b. iv.

UNIT, n. f. [unus, latinus, Lat.] One; the least number;

or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. Bentley's Sermons.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

TO UNITE, v. a. [unitus, Lat.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed,
In one alone right hand he now unites. Fairy Queen.

And force them with a constancy, the cardinal Cannot stand under them. Shakspeare's Hen. VIII.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITE, adv. With union; so as to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much painted, and united on their lower parts; but boldly touch'd above by the light and shadows. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

UNITER, n. f. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both. Glanville's Sept.

UNITION, n. f. [unio, Fr. from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the union, hope not to cure a wound. Wifeman's Surgery.

UNITIVE, adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNITY, n. f. [unitas, Lat.]

1. The state of being one.

Those heretics introduced a plurality of Gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget

Like of his like; his image multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires Collateral love, and dearest amity. Milton's Par. Lost.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakspeare.

We, of all christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Sprat's Sermons.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much; that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hosker, b. iv.

4. Principle of dramatick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden's Pref. to All for Love.

UNI

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and alto-nifies the fancy. Addison.

5. [In law.]

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished;
by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Cowel.

UNJUDGED, adj. Not judicially determined.

Causas unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVERSAL, adj. [universalis, Lat.]

1. General; extending to all.

All forrow'd: if all the world could have seen't, the woe had been universal. Shakspeare's Winter Tale.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakspeare's Troilus and Crisida.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it, it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particulars.

From things particular

She doth abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbutnot and Pope.

UNIVERSAL, n. f. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end had the angel been set to keep the entrance into paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Plato calleth God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Raleigh.

UNIVERSALITY, n. f. [universalitas, school Lat.] Not particularity; generality; extension to the whole.

This catalogue of sin, is but of sin under a limitation; an universality of sin under a certain kind; that is, of all sins of direct and personal commission. South's Sermons.

The universality of the deluge I insist upon: and that marine bodies are found in all parts of the world. Woodward.

A special conclusion cannot be inferred from a moral uni- versality, nor always from a physical one; though it may be always inferred from an universality that is metaphysical. Watts.

UNIVERALLY, adv. [from universal.] Throughout the whole;

without exception.

Those offences which are breaches of supernatural laws,
violate in general that principle of reason which willett uni- versally fly from evil. Hosker.

There best beheld, where universally admir'd. Milton.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own, in coin as good, and as universally valuable. Dryden.

This institution of charity-schools universally prevailed. Addi.

UNIVERSE, n. f. [univers, Fr. universum, Lat.] The general system of things.

Creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe. Shakspeare.

God here sums up all into man; the whole into a part;
the universe into an individual. South's Sermons.

Father of heav'n!

Whose word call'd out this universe to birth. Prior.

UNIVERSITY, n. f. [universitas, Lat.] A school, where all the arts and faculties are taught and studied.

While I play the good husband at home, my son and servants spend all at the university. Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

UNK

ture: very being itself does not predicate unjustly touching God, and any created being, and intellect, and will, as we attribute them to him. Hale.

2. In one tenour. Thomson's Winter.

All creatures are generated unjustly by parents of their own kind; there is no such thing as spontaneous generation. Ray.

Morn late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Thomson's Winter.

UNJO'YST. adj. [injuste, Fr. injustus, Lat.] Iniquitous; contrary to equity; contrary to justice. It is used both of persons and things.

I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal, Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The Piercings
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakespeare.

He that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much. Luke xvi.

Succeeding kings just recovery of their right, from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Charles.

Th' unjust of the just hath slain. Milton.

He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just to condemn himself for it. Locke.

UNJUSTIFIABLE. adj. Not to be defended; not to be justified.

If these reproaches, which aim only at ostentation of wit, be so unjustifiable, what shall we say to those that are drawn, that are founded in malice? Government of the Tongue.

In a just and honourable war we engaged; not out of ambition, or any other unjustifiable motive, but for the defence of all that was dear to us. Atterbury.

If we could look into effects, we might pronounce boldly: but for a man to give his opinion of what he sees but in part, is an unjustifiable piece of rashness. Addison.

UNJUSTIFIABLENESS. n. f. The quality of not being justifiable.

He wished them to consider of the illegality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of all the proceedings which had been by virtue of them. Clarendon.

UNJUSTIFIABLY. adv. In a manner not to be defended.

UNJUSTLY. adj. In a manner contrary to right.

If aught against my life
Thy country fought of thee, it fought unjustly. Milton.

Whom, but for voting peace, the Greeks pursue,
Accus'd unjustly, then unjustly flew. Denham.

Your choler does unjustly rise,
To see your friends pursue your enemies. Dryden.

Moderation the one side very justly disowns, and the other as unjustly pretends to. Swift.

UNKE'PT. adj. Not combed. Obsolete.

Thenot, to that I chose thou dost me tempt;
But ah! too well I wot my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been rugged and unkept. Spenser.

Go, little book, thyself present,
As child whose parent is unke'nt,
To him, that is the president
Of nobleness and chivalrie. Spenser.

UNKE'PT. adj.

1. Not kept; not retained.

2. Unobserved; unobeyed.

Many things kept generally heretofore, are now in like sort generally unkept, and abolished, every where. Hosker.

UNKIND. adj. Not favourable; not benevolent.

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind. Shakespeare.

To the noble mind
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind. Shakespeare.

To Nimrod our author seems a little unkind; and says, that he, against right, enlarged his empire. Locke.

A real joy I never knew,
Till I believ'd thy passion true;
A real grief I ne'er can find,
Till thou prov'st perjur'd or unkind. Prior.

UNKINDLY. adj. [un and kind.]

1. Unnatural; contrary to nature.

They, with their filthiness,
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.

UNK

All works of nature,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd. Milton.

Many are the trees of God, that grow
In paradise, and various, yet unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To us, unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass. Rescommen.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass. Dryden.

If any chance has hither brought the name
Of Palamedes, not unknown to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes,
Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,
And known, had been abhor'd. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

At fear of death, that saddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne?
Despite the known, not tremble at th' unknown. Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.

The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shakespeare.

4. Without communication.

UNLEISURENESS. n. f. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.

My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unleisurefulness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLESS. conjunct. Except; if not; supposing that not.

Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other: for, unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hosker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakespeare.

What

UNL

- What hidden strength,
Unle's the strength of heav'n, if you mean that. Milton.
 For sure I am, unle's I win in arms,
 To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
 Nor can my strength avail, unle's by thee,
 Endu'd with force, I gain the victory. Dryden.
 The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unle's extorted. Dryden.
 No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unle's he were, like Phœbus, young;
 Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unle's, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.
UNLE'SONED, adj. Not taught.
 The full sum of me
 Is an unle'son'd girl, unchool'd, unpractis'd;
 Happy in this, she is not yet so old
 But she may learn. Shakespeare.
UNLE'TTERED, adj. Unlearned; untaught.
 When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul excepted, the rest were unchool'd and unle'ttered men. Hooker, b. iv.

 Ask what boldness brought him hither Unlicens'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
 Warn the thoughtless, self-confiding train,
 No more, unlicens'd, thus to brave the main. Pope.
UNLI'CKED, adj. Shapeless; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.
 Shape my legs of an unequal size,
 To disproportion me in every part,
 Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shakespeare.
 Those unlick'd bear-whelps. Donne.
 The bloody bear, an independent beast,
Unlick'd to form, in groans her hate exprest. Dryden.
UNLI'GHTED, adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.
 There lay a log unlighted on the earth:
 For th' unborn chief the fatal fifters came,
 And rais'd it up, and tois'd it on the flame. Dryden.
 The sacred wood, which on the altar lays Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior.
UNLI'GHTSOME, adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.
 First the fun,
 A mighty sphere! he fram'd, unlightsome first;
 Though of ethereal mould. Milton's Par. Lost.
UNLI'KE, adj.
 1. Dissimilar; having no resemblance.
 Where caies are to unlike as theirs and ours, I see not how that which they did, should induce, much less unlike us to the same practice. Hooker, b. v.
 So the twins humours, in our Terence, are Unlike; this harsh and rude, that smooth and fair. Denham.
Unlike the niceness of our modern dames;
 Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
 Our ideas, whilst we are awake, succeed one another, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lantern. Locke.
 Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd;
Unlike successes equal merits found. Pope.
 2. Improbable; unlikely; not likely.
 Make not impossible that which but seems unlike. Shakespeare.
 What befel the empire of Almaigne were not unlike to befall to Spain, if it should break. Bacon.
UNLI'KELIHOOD, {from unlikely.} Improbability.
UNLI'KELINESS, { }
 The work was carried on, amidst all the unlikehoods and discouraging circumstances imaginable; the builders, holding the sword in one hand, to defend the trowel working with the other. South's Sermons.
 There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonstration, quite down to improbability and unlikehood, even to the confines of impossibility. Locke.
UNLI'KELY, adj.
 1. Improbable; not such as can be reasonably expected.
 Suspicion Mopia; for a very unlikely envy she hath stumbled upon. Sidney.
 2. Not promising any particular event.
 My advice and actions both have met Success in things unlikely. Denham's Sophy.
 This collection we thought not only unlikely to reach the future, but unworthy of the present age. Swift.
 Effects are miraculous and strange, when they grow by un- likely means. Hooker.

UNL

- UNLI'KELY*, adv. Improbably.
 The pleasures we are to enjoy in that conversation, not unlikely may proceed from the discoveries each shall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.
UNLI'KENESS, n. f. Diffimilitude; want of resemblance.
 Imitation pleases, because it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or fallhood of imitation, by comparing its likeness, or unlikeness with the original. Dryden.
UNLI'MITABLE, adj. Admitting no bounds.
 He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimitable. Locke.
UNLI'MITED, adj.
 1. Having no bounds; having no limits.
 So unlimited is our impotence to recompence or repay
 God's dilection, that it fetters our very wishes. Boyle.
 It is some pleasure to a finite understanding, to view un- limited excellencies, which have no bounds, though it cannot comprehend them. Tillotson.
 2. Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.
 With grofs and popular capacities, nothing doth more prevail than unlimited generalities, because of their plainness at the first sight; nothing less, with men of exact judgment, because such rules are not safe to be trusted over far. Hooker.
 3. Unconfined; not restrained.
 All the evils that can proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.
 Ascribe not unto God such an unlimited exercise of mercy,
 as may destroy his justice. Rogers's Sermons.
 Husbands are countell'd not to trust too much to their wives owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity. At.
UNLI'MITEDLY, adv. Boundlessly; without bounds.
 Many ascribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the stress of whatever commissions they shall lay upon it. Deacy of Piety.
UNLI'NEAL, Not coming in the order of succession.
 They put a barren scepter in my gripe,
 Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
 No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
TO UNLI'NK, v. a. To untwist; to open.
 About his neck
 A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself;
 Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
 The opening of his mouth; but suddenly Shakespeare.
 Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself. Shakespeare.
UNLI'QUIFIED, adj. Unmelted; undissolved.
 These huge, unwieldy lumps remained in the melted matter, rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
TO UNLO'AD, v. a.
 1. To disburden; to exonerate.
 Like an ass, whole back with ingots bows,
 Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
 And death unloads thee. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.
 Vain man forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
 Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Greec.
 Some to unload the fertile branches run. Pope.
 2. To put off any thing burdensome.
 To you duke Humphry must unload his grief. Shakespeare.
 Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burthen, Shak.
TO UNLO'CK, v. a.
 1. To open what is shut with a lock.
 I have seen her unlock her closet, take forth paper. Shakespeare.
 She springs a light,
Unlocks the door, and ent'ring out of breath,
 The dying saw, and instruments of death. Dryden.
 2. To open in general.
 My purvey, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare, Mer. of Venice.
 I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
 In this unhalow'd air, but that this jugler
 Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
 Obtruding false rules, pranc'd in reason's garb. Milton.
 I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart,
 Who with a grain of manhood well resolv'd,
 Might easily have shook off all her snares. Milton.
 Sand is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warms them,
 and unlocks their binding qualities. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 A luvium of quick-lime unlocks the salts that are entangl'd in the viscid juices of some scorbatic persons. Arbutnot.
 Thy forests, Windsor! and thy green retreats Invite my lays. Be present, sylvan maids!
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades. Pope.
UNLO'CKED, adj. Not fastened with a lock.
UNLO'CKED, { }
UNLO'CKED, { } adj. Unexpected; not foreseen.
 Yet perhaps had their number prevail'd, if the king of Pontus had not come unlock'd for to their succour. Sidney.
 How much unlock'd for is this expedition! Shakespeare.
 God, I pray him
 That none of you may live your natural age,
 But by some unlock'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.
 Whatsoever

UNL

- Whatsoever is new is unlook'd for; and ever it mends some,
 and pares others. Bacon.
 From that high hope, to what relapse
Unlook'd for are we fall'n. Paradise Regain'd.
 Your affairs I have recommended to the king, but with an-look'd success. Denham.
 Nor fame I slight, nor for her favours call;
 She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.
UNLOO'SABLE, adj. [A word rarely used.] Not to be looted.
 Whatever may be said of the unloosable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies, that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta-position, and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded. Boyle.
TO UNLOO'SE, v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
 so that to unloose, is properly to bind.
 York, unloose your long imprison'd thoughts,
 And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shakespeare.
 The weak, wanton Cupid,
 Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
 And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
 Be shook to air. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
 Turn him to any cause of policy;
 The gordian-knot of it he will unloose, Shakespeare, Hen. V.
 Familiar as his garter.
 It rask'd in you,
 'T' unloose this tied-up justice, when you pleas'd. Shakespeare.
 The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. Mark i. 7.
 He that should spend all his time in tying intricate knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not much to have served his generation. Deacy of Piety.
TO UNLOO'SE, v. n. To fall in pieces; to lose all union and connexion.
 Without this virtue, the publick union must unloose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.
UNLOV'D, adj. Not loved.
 As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though reason there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidney, b. ii.
 What though I be not fortunate;
 But miserable most to love unlovd!
 He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person. Clarendon, b. viii.
UNLOV'ELINESS, n. f. Unamiableness; inability to create love.
 The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of unhoneft servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to countervail his own unlov'eliness. Sidney, b. ii.
UNLOV'ELY, adj. That cannot excite love. There seems by this word generally more intended than barely negation. See UNLOV'ELINESS.
UNLOV'ING, adj. Unkind; not fond.
 Thou, blest with a goodly son,
 Didst yield content to disinherit him;
 Which argu'd thee a most unloving father. Shakespeare.
UNLU'CKLY, adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.
 Things have fallen out to unluckily,
 That we have had no time to move our daughter. Shakespeare.
 An ant dropt unluckily into the water. L'Estrange.
 A fox unluckily crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment. Addison's Freeholder, N° 3.
UNLU'CKY, adj.
 1. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness. This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.
 You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments misarry. Boyle.
 2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.
 Then shall I you recount a rueful case,
 Said he; the which with this unlucky eye
 I late beheld. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.
 His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust;
 His doings unlucky, and ever unjust. Tusser.
 Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served. L'Estrange.
 A lad, th' unluckiest of his crew,
 Was still contriving something bad, but new. King.
 4. Ill-omen'd; inauspicious.
 When I appear, see you avoid the place,
 And haunt me not with that unlucky face. Dryden.
UNLU'STROUS, adj. Wanting splendour; wanting lustre.
 Should I join gipses with hands
 Made hard with hourly falsehood, as with labour;
 Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
 Bate and unlustrous as the smoaky light
 That's fed with stinking tallow. Shakespeare.

UNM

- TO UNLU'TE*, v. a. To separate vessels clos'd with chymical cement.
 Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us an ounce of fulphur, of so sulphureous a smell, that upon the unluting the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink. Boyle.
UNMA'DE, adj.
 1. Not yet formed; not created.
 Thou wast begot in Demogorgon's hall,
 And saw'st the secrets of the world unmade. Fairy Queen.
 Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
 And fall upon the ground as I do now,
 Taking the measure of an unmade grave. Shakespeare.
 2. Deprived of form or qualities.
 The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and framed a-new. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 3. Omitted to be made.
 You may the world of more defects upbraid,
 That other works by nature are unmade;
 That she did never at her own expence
 A palace rear. Blackmore.
UNMA'IMED, adj. Not deprived of any essential part.
 An interpreter should give his author entire and unmaimed;
 the diction and the verification only are his proper province. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
UNMA'KABLE, adj. Not possible to be made.
 If the principles of bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakable by any but a divine power. Grew's Cosmology.
TO UNMA'KE, v. a. To deprive of former qualities before possessed. To deprive of form or being.
 They've made themselves, and their finess now
 Does unmake you. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 God does not make or unmake things, to try experiments. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Empire! thou poor and despicable thing,
 When such as these make, or unmake a king. Dryden.
 Bring this guide of the light within to the trial. God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man. Locke.
TO UNMA'N, v. a.
 1. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a human being, as reason.
 What, quite unmann'd in folly? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 Grofs errors unman, and strip them of the very principles of reason, and sober discourse. South's Sermons.
 2. To emasculate.
 3. To break into irresolution; to deject.
 Her clamours pierce the Trojans ears,
Unman their courage, and augment their fears. Dryden.
 Ulysses veil'd his pensive head;
 Again unman'd, a shower of sorrows shed. Pope.
UNMA'NAGEABLE, adj.
 1. Not manageable; not easily governed.
 They'll judge every thing by models of their own, and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority but that of absolute dominion. Glanville.
 None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuses for the obstinate. Locke.
 2. Not easily wielded.
UNMA'NAGED, adj.
 1. Not broken by horsemanship.
 Like colts, or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 2. Not tutored; not educated.
 Savage princes flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanaged virtue. Pelton on the Classics.
UNMA'NLIKE, { } adj.
UNMA'NELY, { }
 1. Unbecoming a human being.
 It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who,
 not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their master-hood nothing, without doing injury to them. Sidney.
 Where the act is unmanly, or the expectation contradictory to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain. Collier against Despair.
 2. Unfuitable to a man; effeminate.
 By the greatness of the cry, it was the voice of man;
 though it were a very unmanlike voice, so to cry. Sidney.
 New customs,
 Though never so ridiculous,
 Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd. Shakespeare.
 This is in thee a nature but affected;
 A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
 From change of fortune. Shakespeare, Timon of Athens.
 My servitude, ignoble,
Unmanly, ignominious, infamous. Milton's Agamemnon.
 Think not thy friend can ever feel the soft Unmanly warmth, and tenderness of love. Addison.

For friends to trust, and enemies to fear. Dryden.
UNMARRABLE, adj. Unconquerable; not to be subdued.
The factor is unmarrable by the natural heat of man; not to be dulcified by concoction, beyond unfavourable condition.
Brewin's Vulgar Errors.
UNMARRIED, adj.
1. Not subdued.
2. Not conquerable.
Weigh what loss your honour may sustain, if you
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmarr'd importunity. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
He cannot his unmarr'd grief sustain.
But yields to rage, to madness and disdain. Dryden.
UNMATCHABLE, adj. Unparalleled; unequalled.
The soul of Christ, that saw in this life the face of God, was, through to visible presence of Deity, filled with all manner of graces and virtues in that unmatchable degree of perfection; for which, of him we read it written, that God with the oil of gladness anointed him. Hooker, b. v.
Most radiant, exquisite, and unmatchable beauty, tell me,
if this be the lady of the house. Shakespeare.
England breeds very valiant creatures; their matris are of unmatchable courage. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
UNMATCHED, adj. Matchless; having no match, or equal.
That glorious day, which two such navies saw,
As each, unmatch'd, might to the world give law;
Neptune, yet doubtful whom he should obey,
Held to them both the trident of the sea. Dryden.
UNMEANING, adj. Expressing no meaning;
With round, unmeaning face. Pope.

Or gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm,
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears. Milton.
To UNPIN. v. a. To open what is shut, or fastened with a pin.
My love doth so approve him,
That even his stubbornness, his checks and frowns, (Pr'ythee unpin me) have grace and favour in them. Shakespeare.
Unpin that spangled breast-plate which you wear,
That th' eyes of busy fools may be stop'd there. Dennis.
Who is the honest man?
He that doth still and strongly good pursue,
To God, his neighbour, and himself most true:
Whom neither force, nor fawning can Unpin, or wrench from giving all their due. Herbert.
UNPINKE. adj. Not marked with eyelid holes.
Gabriel's pumps were all unpink'd th' heel. Shakespeare.
UNPITIED. adj. Not compassionated; not regarded with sympathetic sorrow.
Richard yet lives; but at hand, at hand
Infuses his piteous and unpitied end. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Rich in the world's opinion, and men's praise,
And full in all we could desire, but days:
He that is warm'd of this, and shall forbear
To vent a sigh for him, or shed a tear;
May he live long scorn'd, and unpitied fall. Boyle.
And want a mourner at his funeral.
But he whose words and fortunes disagree,
Abundant, unpitied, grows a publick jest.
He that does not secure himself of a flock of reputation in his advice greatness, shall most certainly fall unpitied in his adversity. L'Estrange.
As the greatest curse that I can give,
Unpitied be depos'd, and after live. Dryden's Aeneas.

UNP

As some sad turtle his lost love deplores;
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpitied, and forlorn. Pope.
Passion unpitied, and successless love,
Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Addison's Cato.

We cannot boast of good-breeding, and the art of life; but yet we don't live unpleasantly in primitive simplicity and good humour. Pope.
UNPLEASANTNESS. n. f. Want of qualities to give delight.
As for unpleasantness of founds, if it doth happen the good of men's souls doth deceive our ears, that we note it not, or arm them with patience to endure it. Hooker.
Many people cannot at all endure the air of London, not only for its unpleasantness, but for the suffocations which it causes. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
All men are willing to skulk out of such company; the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness of it. Government of the Tongue.
UNPLEAS'D. adj. Not pleased; not delighted.
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye feel your courtesy. Shakespeare.
Condemn'd to live with subjects ever mute,
A salvage prince, unpleas'd, though absolute. Dryden.
UNPLEASING. adj. Offensive; disgusting; giving no delight.
Set to dress this garden:
How darest thou tongue found this unpleasing news? Shakespeare.
Hence the many mistakes, which have made learning so unpleasing and so unsuccessful. Milton.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Howe'er unpleasing be the news you bring,
I blame not you, but your imperious king. Dryden.
UNPLIANT. adj. Not easily bent; not conforming to the will.
The chisel hath more glory than the pencil; that being so hard an instrument, and working upon so unpliant stuff, can yet leave strokes of so gentle appearance. Waller.
UNPLOWED. adj. Not plowed.
Good found land, that hath lain long unplowed. Mortimer.
To UNPLUME. adj. To strip of plumes; to degrade.
In the most ordinary phenomena in nature, we shall find enough to shame confidence, and unplume dogmatizing. Glanville.

Reward your fingers for your brains? Bp. Corbet.
UNPOLISHED. adj.
1. Not smoothed; not brightened by attrition.
Palladio, having noted in an old arch at Verona, some part of the materials cut in fine forms, and some unpolished, doth conclude, that the ancients did leave the outward face of their marbles, or free-stone, without any sculpture, till they were laid in the body of the building. Wotton.
He affirms it to have been the ancient custom of all the Greeks, to set up unpolished stones instead of images, to the honour of the gods. Stillingfleet.
2. Not civilized; not refined.
Finding new words,
Such as of old wise bards employ'd to make Unpolish'd men their wild retreats forsake. Waller.
Those first unpolish'd matrons, big and bold,
Gave suck to infants of gigantic mould. Dryden.
UNPOLITE. adj. [im'poli, Fr. impolite, Lat.] Not elegant; not refined; not civil.
Discourses for the pulpit should be cast into a plain method, and the reasons ranged under the words, first, secondly, and thirdly; however they may be now fancied to sound unpolite, or unfashionable. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
UNPOLLUTED. adj. [impollutus, Lat.] Not corrupted; not defiled.
Lay her i' th' earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! Shakespeare's Hamlet.
'Till oft converse with heav'nly habitants
Begin to cast a beam on th' outward shape,
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turns it by degrees to the soul's essence,
'Till all be made immortal. Milton.
Though unpolluted yet with actual ill,
She halt commits, who sins but in her will. Dryden.
UNPOPULAR. adj. Not fitted to please the people.
The practices of these men, under the covert of feigned zeal, made the appearance of sincere devotion ridiculous and unpopular. Addison's Freeholder, N° 37.

I am young, a novice in the trade;
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts. Dryden.
His tender eye, by too direct a ray,
Wounded, and flying from unpractis'd day. Prior.
UNPRAISED. adj. Not celebrated; not praised.
The land,
In antique times was salvage wilderness;
Unpeop'd, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Fairy Queen.
If all the world
Sould in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
Th' all-giver would be unthank'd, wou'd be unprais'd. Milton.
If young African for fame
His wasted country freed from Punick rage,
The deed becomes unprais'd, the man at least,
And loses, though but verbal, his reward. Milton.
Nor pass unprais'd the vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage, and rich flow'rs entwine. Dryden.
UNPRECEDENTED. adj. Not dependent on another.

time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me. Philemon 11.
They receive aliment sufficient, and yet no more than they can well digest; and withal sweat out the coarsest and unprofitablest juice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
It is better to fall honourably, than to survive in an unprofitable and unglorious life. L'Estrange.
Then they who brothers better claim disown,
Defraud their clients, and to lucre fold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.
With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime.
An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough. Dryden.
With tears so tender,
As any heart, but only her's, could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out th' unprofitable blood. Dryden.
UNPRO'SONED. adj. Set free from confinement.
Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did fly;
Fire rose, and each from other but untid'd,
Themselves unpro'son'd were, and purify'd. Donne.
UNPRIZED. adj. Not valued.
Not all the dukes of wat'rish Burgundy,
Can buy this unprized, precious maid of me. Shakespeare.

Her holy limbs with any human hand.
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land. Dryden.
UNPROFITABLENESS. n. f. Uselessness.
We are so persuaded of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.
UNPROFITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.
I shou'd not now unprofitably spend Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wreaths 'em from our hands,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
UNPROFITED. adj. Having no gain.
Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds,
Rather than make unprofit'd return. Shakespeare.
UNPROFITICK. adj. Barren; not productive.
Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unprofitick, or destroy them. Hale.
UNPROMISING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.
If he be naturally listless and dreaming, this unpromising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Locke.

but putrified, yields a volatile alkali. Arbutnot.
UNQUALIFIED. adj. Not fit.
Till he has denuded himself of all these incumbrances,
he is utterly unqualified for these agonies. Decay of Piety.
All the writers against christianity, since the revolution, have been of the lowest rank in regard to literature, wit, and sense; and upon that account wholly unqualified to propagate heresies, unless among a people already abandoned. Sw.
Tories are more hated by the zealous whigs, than the very papists, and as much unqualified for the smallest offices. Sw.
TO UNQUALIFY. v. a. To disqualify; to divest of qualification.
Arbitrary power so diminishes the basis of the female figure, as to unqualify a woman for an evening walk. Addison.
Our private misfortunes may unqualify us for charity: but reflect, whether they may not have been inflicted by God, as a just punishment of our former unmercifulness. Atterbury.
Deafness unqualifies me for all company. Swift.
UNQUALIFIABLE. adj. Such as cannot be impugned.
There arise unto the examination such satisfactory and unqualifiable reasons, as may confirm the causes generally received. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO UNQUEEN. v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.
Embaln me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakespeare.

I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire. Flakewill.
UNQUESTIONABLE. adj.
1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.
The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Watton.
One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncon-troverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities. Glouville's Scept.
There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise Lost. Addison.
2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impatience;
this seems to be the meaning here.
What were his marks? —
—A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not. Shakespeare.
UNQUESTIONABLY. adv. Indubitably; without doubt.
If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat.
St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose. Barnet.
UNQUESTIONED. adj.

His senses droop, his steady eyes unquick;
And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel's Civ. War.

UNQUICKENED. adj. Not animated; not ripened to vitality.
Every fetus bears a secret hoard,
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;
Which num'rous, but unquicken'd progeny,
Clasp'd, and enwrap'd, within each other lie. Blackmore.

UNQUI'ET. adj. [inquiet, Fr. inquietus, Lat.]
1. Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.
From grammatick flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and turmoil'd with their unballast'd wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.

2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.
Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shakefp. Mer. of Venice.

3. Restless; unsatisfied.
From thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n. Milton.

4. She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glitt'ring, wretched thing,
Mirth from company is but a fluttering, unquiet motion, that beats about the breast for a few moments, and after leaves it empty. Pope.

UNQUIETLY. adv. Without rest.
Who's there besides foul weather? —
—One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shakefp. K. Lear.

Of horrible confusion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

UNRE'ASONABLE. adj.
1. Exorbitant; claiming, or insisting on more than is fit.
Since every language is so full of its own proprieties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow compass of his author's words. Dryden's Pref. to Ovid.

2. My intention in prefixing your name, is not to desire your protection of the following papers, which I take to be a very unreasonable request; since, by being inscribed to you, you cannot recommend them without some suspicion of partiality.
Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

3. Not agreeable to reason.
No reason known to us; but that there is no reason thereof, I judge most unreasonable to imagine. Hooker, b. i.

4. It is unreasonable for men to be judges in their own cases; self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Lake.

5. She entertained many unreasonable prejudices against him, before she was acquainted with his personal worth. Addison.

6. Greater than is fit; immoderate.
Those that place their hope in another world, have, in a great measure, conquer'd dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Astell.

UNRE'ASONABLENESS. n. f.
1. Exorbitance; excessive demand.
The unreasonableness of propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of their major number. K. Char. i.

2. A young university disputant was complaining of the unreasonableness of a lady, with whom he was engaged in a point of controversy. Addison's Freeholders, N^o 32.

3. Inconsistency with reason.
The unreasonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition. Hammond.

UNRE'ASONABLY. adv.
1. In a manner contrary to reason.
I'll not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars. —
—Fye! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Shakefp.

by sleep. Arbutnot.

UNREGARDED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.
We, ever by his might,
Had thrown to ground the unregarded right. Fairy Queen.

Do't see, how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time when I did vow
To that alone;
But mark the fate of faces.
On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king;
A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.
Me you have often counsel'd to remove
My vain pursuit of unregarded love. Denham.

Laws against immorality have not been executed, and proclamations to enforce them, are wholly unregard'd. Swift.

UNREGISTERED. adj. Not recorded.
Hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

This is not to be understood promiscuously of all men, unregenerate persons, as well as regenerate. Stephens.

U N R

UNREINED. adj. Not restrained by the bridle.
Left from thy flying steed unrein'd, as once Bellerophon, though from a lower clime Dismounted, on th' Aelian field I fall. Milton.

UNRELE'NTING. adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.
Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?
These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamanthus rules the state. Dryden.

False tears shall wet his unrelenting eyes,
And his glad heart with artful sighs shall heave. Smith.

UNRELIE'VABLE. adj. Admitting no succour.
As no degree of distress is unrelievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.

UNRELIEVED. adj.
1. Not succoured.
The goddess griev'd,
Her favour'd host thou'd perish unreliev'd. Dryden.

shafts of chimnies in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Watson's Architecture.

UNREMEMBRANCE. n. f. Forgetfulness; want of remembrance.
Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amnesty, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watts's Logic.

UNREMOVABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.
Never was there any woman, that with more unremovable determination gave herself to love, after she had once set before her mind the worthiness of Amphialus. Sidney, b. ii.

You know the fiery quality of the duke,
How unremovable and fixt he is
In his own course. Shakefp.

UNREMOVED. adj.
1. Not taken away.
It is impossible, where this opinion is imbibed and *unre-

Nature's law, and unrepeal'd command,
That gives to lighter things the greatest height. Blackmore.

UNREPE'NED. adj. Not regarded with penitential sorrow.
They are no fit supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker, b. v.

If I, vent'ring to displease
God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
Set God behind: which in his jealousy
Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness. Milton's Agonistes.

As in unrepented sin the dy'd,
Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride. Dryd.

With what confusion will he hear all his unrepented sins produced before men and angels? Rogers's Sermons.

UNREPE'NTING. adj. Not repenting; not penitent; not UNREPE'NTANT. adj. sorrowful for sin.

UNRU

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumb'd, unrepentant, unform'd,
Headlong would follow. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
My unrepaid, and unrepenting breath,
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death. Roscommon.
All his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.
Nor tyrants fierce, that unrepenting die,
E'er felt such rage as thou. Pope's Rape of the Lock.
UNREPENTING. adj. Not peevishly complaining.
Barefoot as the trod the flinty pavement,
Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;
Yet silent on the pass'd, and unrepining. Rowe.

religion. Sandys's Journey.
2. Not liable to censure.
The antique world, in his first flow'ring youth,
With gladome thanks, and unreproved truth,
The gifts of foreign bounty did embrace. Fairy Queen.
If I give thee honour due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In unreproved pleasures free. Milton.
UNREPU'GANT. adj. Not opposite.
When scripture doth yield us natural laws, what particular order is thereunto most agreeable; when positive, which way to make laws unreputant unto them. Hooker, b. iii.
UNREPUTABLE. adj. Not creditable.
When we see wife men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue. Rogers.
UNREQUESTED. adj. Not asked.
With what security can our ambassadors go, unrequested of the Turkish emperor, without his safe conduct? Kneller.
UNREQUITABLE. adj. Not to be retaliated.
Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
So unrequitable is God's love, and so insolvent are we,
that that love vastly improves the benefit, by which alone we might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle.
UNRESENTED. adj. Not regarded with anger.
The failings of these holy persons, passed not unresented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.
UNRESERVED. adj.
1. Not limited by any private convenience.
The piety our heavenly father will accept, must consist in an entire, unreserved obedience to his commands; since whoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.
2. Open; frank; concealing nothing.
UNRESERVEDNESS. n. f. Unlimitedness; frankness; largeness.
The tenderness and unreservedness of his love, made him think those his friends or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.
UNRESERVEDLY. adv.
1. Without limitations.
I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.
2. Without concealment; openly.
I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.

I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.
UNRESTED. adj.
1. Not opposed.
The æthereal spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist, nor retard, the planets, which roll through as free and un-rested, as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Restless; such as cannot be opposed.
Those gods! whose unrested might Have sent me to these regions void of light. Dryden.
What wonder then, thy hairs should feel
The conqu'ring force of unrested steel? Pope.

UNR

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.
What noise? that spirit's posses'd with haste,
That wounds th' unresisting postern with these strokes. Shaksp.
The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence. Dryden.
A patient, useful creature,
Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heav'ns, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impress'd. Bentley's Sermons.
UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.
For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin influates before it destroys. South's Sermons.
UNRESOLVED. adj.
1. Not determined; having made no resolution.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends;
Unarm'd, and unresolved to beat them back. Shaksp.
Turnus, unresolved of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryden.
2. Not solved; not cleared.
I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.
UNRESOLVING. adj. Not resolving.
She her aims about her unresolving husband threw. Dryd.
UNRESPECTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.
I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with confid'rate eyes. Shaksp.
UNREST. n. f. Disquiet; want of tranquillity; inquietness.
Wife behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Fairy Queen.
Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their aims out of the emper's chest. Shaksp.
Disarm'd confusion all possess'd;
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot deserv'd;
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest.
To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;
For deep sleep wounds, can least their feelings tell;
Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest,
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wotton.
Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
UNRESTORED. adj.
1. Not restored.
2. Not cleared from an attainder.
The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier on Duelling.
UNRESTRAINED. adj.
1. Not confined; not hindered.
My tender age, in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease, and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.
2. Licentious; loose.
The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shaksp.
3. Not limited.
Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution, a non-usage, or abolition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
UNRETRACTED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.
The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may lend us to unquenchable flames. Govern. of the Tongue.
Nothing but plain malevolence can justify diuision. Malevolence shewn in a single, outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier on Friendship.
UNREVEALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.
Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures, Shaksp.
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing.
Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevealed.
Not pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.
UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.
So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenge'd all.
Unhonour'd though I am, Dryden.
Not unrevenge'd that impious act shall be.
Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unrevenge'd amongst us. Shaksp.
UNREVERENT. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.
See not your bride in these unreverent robes. Shaksp.
Fie! unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty to oft thou hast prefer'd,
With twenty thousand foul-confessing oaths. Shaksp.
Un-

UNR

UNREVERENTLY. adv. Disrespectfully.
I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. B. Johns.
UNREVERSED. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.
She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shaksp.
UNREVO'KED. adj. Not recalled.
Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.
UNREWARD'ED. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.
Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded.
Since for common good I yield the fairy
My private lets let grateful Greece repair;
Nor unrewarded let her prince complain,
That he alone has fought and bled in vain. Pope.
To UNRIDDLE. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.
Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes! Sackling.
The Platonic principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glave.
A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.
UNRIDICULOUS. adj. Not ridiculous.
If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this au-stereous unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To UNRIG. v. a. To strip of the tackle.
Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.
UNRIGHT. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.
What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trussed up together. Glave's to Spenser's Kal.
Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisd. xii.
UNRIGHTeous. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.
Octavius here leapt into his room,
And it usurped by unrighteous doom;
But he his title justify'd by might. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Within a month!
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears,
Had left the suffing in her galled eyes,
She married.—Oh most wicked speed!
Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Ia. lv.
UNRIGHTeously. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.
For them
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrighteously it was decreed,
That none to trust, or profit should succeed,
Who would not swallow first a poi'sonous wicked weed. Dryd.
A man may fall undeserv'dly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier on Pride.
UNRIGHTeousNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.
Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, faith Austin upon this place. Hall.
Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.
UNRIGHTful. adj. Not rightful; not just.
Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shaksp.
To UNRING. v. a. To deprive of a ring.
Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vil. franc. pledge. Hudibras.
To UNRIPE. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between ripe and unripe; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.
Like a traitor
Didst break that vow, and, with thy treach'rous blade, Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shaksp.
He could not now, with his honour, to unripe, and put a lie upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We are angry with searchers, when they break open trunks, and unripe packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.
Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be un-ripped, but untied. Collier.
UNRIPE. n. f.
1. Immature; not fully concocted.
Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shaksp.
In this northern tract our hoarse throats,
Utter unripe, and ill-constrained notes. Waller.

UNNR

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer, I. b. ii.
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unripe, b. iii.
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.
2. Too early.
Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and just Dori-laus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney, b. ii.
UNRIPE'NED. adj. Not matured.
Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripe'd beauties of the north. Addison's Cato.
UNRIPE'NESS. n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.
The ripeness, or unripeness, of the occasion, must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes;
and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.
UNRI'VALLED. adj.
1. Having no competitor.
Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd thrine, Pope.
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.
2. Having no peer or equal.
To UNROO'L. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.
O horror!
The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the dust,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden's All for Love.
UNROMANTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.
It is a base, unromantick spirit not to wait on you. Swift.
To UNROOF. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.
The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere to prevail'd with me. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UNROO'STED. adj. Driven from the roof.
Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Parlet here. Shaksp. Winter Tale.
UNROUGH. adj. Smooth.
Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protect their first of manhood. Shaksp. Macbeth.
To UNROOT. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.
Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shaksp.
Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey. Dryden.
UNROUNDED. adj. Not shaped, not cut to a round.
Those unsh'd pistolets,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Denne.
UNRO'YAL. adj. Unprincely; not royal.
By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Mufidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traitorously. Sidney.
To UNRU'FFLE. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.
Where'er he guides his finny couriers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.
UNRU'FFLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.
UNRU'LED. adj. Not directed by any superiour power.
The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging furies, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom the was committed, faint in their labour, or forsook their charge. Spenser.
UNRU'LINESS. n. f. [from unruly.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.
By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others, who without leave were gone a-shore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Knol.
No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices, they never sacrificed so much as one lust. South's Sermons.
UNRU'LY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.
In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Theron, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with bulky pain. Fairy Queen.
Down I come, like glitt'ring Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shaksp. Rich. II.
The best and foundest of his time hath been but rash;
then must we look from his age, to receive but unruly waywardness. Shaksp. K. Lear.
The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Ia. iii.
Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Roscommon.

UNS

Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unuly crowd.
Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unuly appetites. Glauv.
You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unuly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.
UNSAFE, adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.
If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker, b. v.
With speed retir'd
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.
Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.
UNSAFELY, adv. Not securely; dangerously.
Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
*Unsafe*ly just, break loose on this bad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.
As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or *unsafe*ly; but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts amble, which a virtuous man never doth. Grew.
UNSAID, adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.
Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Fulton's Clafficks.
UNSALED, adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.
The murietick scurvy, induced by two great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbutnot.
UNSATURATED, adj. [unsaturatur, Lat.] Not saturated.
Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaturated. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
UNSATURATED, adj. Unholy; not consecrated.
Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erways the order,
She should in ground unsaturated have lodg'd
Till the last trump. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNSATISFIED, adj. [unsatisfabilis, Lat.] Not to be satisfied;
greedy without bounds.
Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker, b. i.
Craffus the Roman, for his unsatisfiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Ralegh.
UNSATISFACTORYNESS, n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.
That which most deters me from such trials, is their un- satisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.
UNSATISFACTORY, adj. Not giving satisfaction; not clearing the difficulty.
That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an un- satisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.
UNSATISFIEDNESS, n. f. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied; want of fulness.
Between my own unsatisfiedness in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was false, than what seemed just. K. Charles.
That unsatisfiedness with transitory fruitions, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children doat upon. Boyle.
UNSATISFIED, adj.
1. Not contented; not pleased.
O Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person, whom she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.
Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me.
Concerning the analytical preparation of gold, they leave persons unsatisfied. Boyle.
2. Not filled; not gratified to the full.
Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakespeare.

UNS

Whether shall I, by justly plaguing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or, being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham's Eclyp.
Eternity, human nature can't look into, without a religious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers's Sermon.
UNSAISFYING, adj. Unable to gratify to the full.
Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.
UNSAVOURINESS, adj. [from unsavoury.]
1. Bad taste.
2. Bad smell.
If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject hereto than any. Brown.
UNSAVOURY, adj.
1. Taffles.
Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job vi. 6.
2. Having a bad taste.
Unsavoury food, perhaps,
To spiritual natures. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Having an ill smell; fetid.
Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.
4. Unpleasant; disgusting.
Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because disputation pre-supposes some difficulty in the matter. Hooker, b. v.
Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakespeare.
To UNSAVY, v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.
Call you me fair? that fair again unsavvy;
Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakespeare.
Say and unsavvy, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.
How soon
Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsavvy
What feign'd submission I wore. Milton's Par. Lost.
To say, and strain unsavvy, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar trad'd. Milton.
There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsavvy hereafter. Arbutnot.
UNSCALY, adj. Having no scales.
The jointed lobster, and unscaley sole. Gay.
UNSCARRED, adj. Not marked with wounds.
And must the die for this? O let her live;
So she may live unscarred from bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. Shakespeare.

Th' enrolled penalties,
Which have, like unscorched armour, hung by th' wall,
And none of them been worn. Shakespeare.
UNSCRATCHED, adj. Not torn.
I with much expedient march
Have brought a counter-check before your gates,
To save unscratched your city's threaten'd cheeks. Shakespeare.
UNSCREENED, adj. Not covered; not protected.
Those balls of burnished brass, the tops of churches are adorned with, derive their glittering brightness from their being exposed, unscreened, to the sun's refulgent beams. Boyle.
UNSCRIPTURAL, adj. Not defensible by scripture.
The doctrine delivered in my sermon was neither new nor unscriptural, nor in itself false. Atterbury.
To UNSEAL, v. a. To open any thing sealed.
This new glare of light
Cast sudden on his face, unsealed his sight. Dryden.
UNSEALD, adj.
1. Wanting a seal.
Your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions but unsealed. Shakespeare.
2. Having the seal broken.
To UNSEAM, v. a. To rip; to cut open.
He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakespeare.

UNS

UNSEARCHABLE, adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.
All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearchable disposer
Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton's Agonistes.
Thou hast vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension, to relate Things else by me unsearchable. Milton's Par. Lost.
Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and unsearchable
perfections of the works of God. Tillotson.
These counsels of God are to us unsearchable; neither has he left us in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.
It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinities and unsearchables. Watts's Logick.
UNSEARCHABLENESS, n. f. Impossibility to be explored.
The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.
UNSEASONABLE, adj.
1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.
Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker, b. v.
Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.
It is then a very unseasonable time to plead law, when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spenser's Ireland.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as is done in hostility. Hayward.
This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place, nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.
Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton.
Timothy lay out a-nights, and went abroad often at un- seasonable hours. Arbutnot.
2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakespeare.
3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.
UNSEASONABLENESS, n. f. Disagreement with time or place.
The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
UNSEASONABLY, adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time or occasion.
Some things it asketh unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest, when no danger is nigh. Hooker, b. v.
Leave to fathom such high points as these,
Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wife, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryden.
By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief, will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbutnot.
Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.
UNSEASONED, adj.
1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are;
the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakespeare.
2. Unformed; not qualified by use.
'Tis an unseason'd courier; advise him. Shakespeare.
3. Irregular; inordinate.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.
4. Not kept till fit for use.
5. Not salted; as, unseasoned meat.
UNSECONDED, adj.
1. Not supported.
Him did you leave
Second to none, unseconded by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
2. Not exemplified a second time.
Strange and unseasoned shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.
To UNSECRETE, v. a. To disclose; to divulge.
He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unsecreting of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

UNS

UNSECRET, adj. Not close; not trusty.
Who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves? Shakespeare.
UNSECURE, adj. Not safe.
Love, though most sure,
Yet always to itself seems unsecure. Denham.
UNSEDUCTED, adj. Not drawn to ill.
If she remain unseduced, you not making it appear otherwise; for your ill opinion, and th' assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword. Shakespeare.
Among innumerable false, unmov'd, Unshaken, unseduced, unterrify'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
UNSEEING, adj. Wanting the power of vision.
I shou'd have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakespeare.
To UNSEEM, v. n. Not to seem. Not in use.
You wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseemly to confers receipt
Of that, which hath so faithfully been paid. Shakespeare.
UNSEEMLINESS, n. f. Indecency; indecorum; uncomeliness.
All as before his sight, whom we fear, and whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker, b. v.
UNSEMLY, n. f. Indecent; uncomely; unbecoming.
Contentions as yet were never able to prevent two evils;
the one a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces offered by men, whose tongues and passions are out of rule;
the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work with most advantage in private. Hooker.
Let us now devise
What best may for the present serve to hide
The parts of each from other, that seem most
To shame obnoxious, and unseemly seen. Milton.
Her gifts
Were such, as under government well seem'd; Unseemly to bear rule. Milton's Par. Lost.
My sons, let your unseemly discord cease;
If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden.
I with every unseemly idea, and wanton expression had been banish'd from amongst them. Watts.
UNSEMLY, adv. Indecently; unbecomingly.
Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own. 1 Cor. xiii. 5.
Unmanly dread invades the French astonish'd;
Unseemly yelling; distant hills return
The hideous noise. Philips.
UNSEEN, adj.
1. Not seen; not discovered.
A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple. Sh.
Her father and myself
Will to dispose ourselves, that seeing, unseen,
We may of the encounter frankly judge. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
A painter became a physician; whereupon one said to him, you have done well; for before the faults of your work were seen, but now they are unseen. Bacon.
Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass.
Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep. Milton.
At his birth a star
Unseen before in heaven, proclaims him come;
And guides the eastern sages who enquire
His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold. Milton.
He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrows plays;
They with a touch, they are so keen,
Wound us unshot, and the unseen. Waller.
The footsteps of the deity he treads,
And secret moves along the crowded space,
Unseen of all the rude Phœacian race. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Invisible; undiscoverable.
The weeds of heresy being grown into ripeness, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterward freshly spring up again no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.
On the came,
Led by her heav'nly maker, though unseen
And guided by his voice. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Unskilled; unexperienced.
He was not unseen in the affections of the court, but had not reputation enough to reform it. Clarendon.
UNSEMLY, adj. Not addicted to private interest.
The most interested cannot purpose any thing so much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unseemly. Spectator, N. 538.
UNSENT, adj.

Unsucc'd of lamb or kid, that tend their play. Milton.
UNSUFFERABLE, n. f. Not supportable; intolerable; not to be endured.
The irksome deformities, whereby through endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, they oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of christian duty towards God. Hooker, b. v.
That glorious form, that light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he went at heav'n's high council table
To fit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.
A stinking breath, and twenty ill smells besides, are more unsufferable by her natural stultifness. Swift.
UNSUFFICIENT, n. f. [insufficiency, Fr.] Inability to answer the end proposed.
The error and insufficiency of the arguments, doth make it on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker, b. v.
UNSUFFICIENT, adj. [insufficient, Fr.] Unable; inadequate.
Malebranche having shew'd the difficulties of the other

Nor have our solitary attempts been so discouraged, as to despair of the favourable look of learning upon our single and unsupported endeavours. Brown's Pref. to Vulgar Errors.
UNSU'RE, adj. Not fixed; not certain.
What is love? 'tis not hereafter:
Present mirth hath present laughter;
What's to come is still unsure. Shakespeare.
The men he prest but late,
To hard assays unfit, unsure at need,
Yet arm'd to point in well attempted plate.
The king, supposing his estate to be most safe, when indeed most unsure, advanced many to new honours. Hayward.
How vain that second life in others breath!
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign;
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.
UNSUREMOUNTABLE, adj. [insurmountable, Fr.] Insupportable;
not to be overcome.
What safety is it, for avoiding seeming absurdities, and unsurmountable rubs in one opinion, to take refuge in the contrary, which is built on something altogether as inexplicable? Locke.

He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state. Shaksp.
2. Inestimable; above price.
I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable stones, unvail'd jewels. Shakespeare.
- UNV'YQUISHED. adj. Not conquered; not overcome.
Shall I for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be called but viceroy of the whole? Shakespeare.
Victory doth more often fall by error of the unvanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.
They rise unvanquish'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
- UNV'YRIABLE. adj. [invariable, Fr.] Not changeable; not mutable.
The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence, is evil. Norris.
- UNV'YRIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.
If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.
They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.
- UNV'YRNISHED. adj.
1. Not overlaid with varnish.
2. Not adorned; not decorated.
I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shaksp. Othello.
- UNV'YRYING. adj. Not liable to change.
We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.
- To UNV'Y. v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL.]
1. To uncover; to divert of a veil.
The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.
To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay moon unveils her smiling ray. Pope.
2. To disclose; to show.
The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. Shak.
- UNV'YLEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.
Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unvelledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands, that scorn to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.
- UNV'YLATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.
This animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore's Creation.
- UNV'YRITABLE. adj. Not true.
All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds. Brown.
- UNV'YSED. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.
Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.
- UNV'YSED. adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.
With a blest and unvers'd retire,
With unhack'd fwords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakespeare.
Unvers'd with thought of wants which may betide;
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden's Juvenal.

U N U

UNVIOLATED. adj. Not injured; not broken.
Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife. Shakespeare.
He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Clarendon.
This strength diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unhorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton.
UNVIRTUOUS. adj. Wanting virtue.
If they can find in their hearts that the poor, unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
UNVISITED. adj. Not resorted to.
In some wild zone
Dwell, not unvisited of heav'n's fair light, Secure. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
The playhouse and the park unvisited must lie. Dryden.
UNUNIFORM. adj. Wanting uniformity.
Such an ununiform piety is in many so exactly apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to with the change of his tenure. Decay of Piety.
UNVOYAGEABLE. adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.
Not this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Detain from following thy illustrious track. Dryden.
UNWAGED. adj. Not incited; not perfid.
The time was once, when thou unwar'd would'st vow,
That never words were music to thine ear,
Unless I spake. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
UNWED. adj.
1. Not put to use; unemployed.
She, whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain to aspiring a purpose, left no art untried, which might keep the line from breaking, whereto the fish was already taken. Sidney.
Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason,
To rust in us untried. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Not accustomed.
He, untried to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Sidney, b. ii.
One, whose eyes,
Albeit untried to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare. Othello.
What art thou?
Not from above: no, thy wan looks betray Diminish'd light, and eyes untried to day. Dryden.
UNUSEFUL. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.
I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be un-useful in the capacities it was intended for. Glanville.
Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them; and they are as yet utterly unuseful for flying. Admiral's Antidote against Atheism.
As when the building gains a further stay,
We take th' unuseful scaffolding away. Dryden.
Pleas'd to find his age
Declining, not unuseful to his lord. Philips.
UNUSUAL. adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.
With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whole heav'nly worldly judgments I nothing doubt but that there may be hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions. Hooker.
You gain your point, if your industrious art
Can make unusual words easy and plain. Resenmon.
A sprightly red vermilion all her face;
And her eyes languish with unusual grace.
That peculiar turn, that the words should appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors. Clarendon.
The river flows redundant, and attacks
The ling'ring remnant with unusual tide. Philips.
UNUSUALNESS. n. s. Uncommonness; infrequency.
It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprizes Alcibiades. Drum.
UNUTTERABLE. adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.
Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable; which the spirit of pray'r
Inspir'd, and waug'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Than lowly oratory. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
It wounds my soul
To think of your unutterable sorrows,
When you shall find Hippolytus was guiltless. Smith.
UNVULNERABLE. adj. Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.
The god of soldiers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick i' th' wars
Like a great sea mark, standing every flaw. Shakespeare.

U N W

UNWAKENED. adj. Not roused from sleep.
The more
His wonder was, to find unawaken'd Eve
With tresses compos'd. Milton's P. Lost, b. vi.
UNWALLED. adj. Having no walls.
He came to Tauris, a great and rich city, but unwall'd, and of no strength. Kneller's Hist. of the Turk.
UNWARES. adv. Unexpectedly; before any caution, or expectation.
She, by her wicked arts,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will. Fairy Queen.
His loving mother came upon a day
Unto the woods, to see her little son,
And chanc'd unwares to meet him in the way,
After his sports and cruel pastime done. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Still we fail, while prosperous blows the wind,
Till on some secret rock unwares we light. Fairy Queen.
UNWARYLY. adv. Without caution; carelessly.
The best part of my powers
Were in the washes all unwarily
Devour'd by the unexpected flood. Shakespeare.
If I had not unwarily engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it till I had look'd over it.
By such principles, they renounce their legal claim to liberty and property, and unwarily submit to what they really abhor. Freeholder, N° 10.
UNWARIENESS. n. s. [from unwary.] Want of caution; carelessness.
The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarinesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Spectator, N° 256.
UNWARILY. adv. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.
He safely might old troops to battle lead,
Against th' unwarlike Persian, and the Mede;
Whole hasty flight did from a bloodless field,
More spoils than honour to the victor yield. Waller.
Avert unwarlike Indians from his Rome,
Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home. Dryden.
UNWARNED. adj. Not cautioned; not made wary.
Unexperienced young men, if unwar'd, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside.
May hypocrites,
That fly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwar'd, till by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose. Philips.
UNWARRANTABLE. adj. Not defensible; not to be justified;
not allowed.
At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compassed without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.
He who does an unwarrantable action through a false information, which he ought not to have believed, cannot in reason make the guilt of one sin the excuse of another. South.
UNWARRANTABLY. adv. Not justifiably; not defensibly.
A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay, unwarrantably require of others. Wake's Preparation for Death.
UNWARRANTED. adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.
The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon hope of an unwarranted conquest; but to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.
UNWARY. adj.
1. Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty; precipitate.
Nor think me so unwary,
To bring my feet again into the snare
Where once I have been caught. Milton's Agamemnon.
So spake the false archangel, and insid'rous
Bad influence into th' unwarly breast.
So talk'd the spirit'd fly snake; and Eve,
Yet more amaz'd, unwarly thus reply'd. Milton.
Turning short, he struck with all his might Full on the helmet of th' unwarly knight.
Deep was the wound. Dryden.
Propositions about religion are insinuated into the unwarly, as well as unbiassed understandings of children, and riveted there by long custom. Locke.
2. Unexpected. Obsolete.
All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwarly sight,
And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Fairy Queen.
UNWASHED. adj. Not washed; not cleansed by washing.
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death. Shakespeare.
To eat with unwash'd hands defileth not a man. Matthew, xv.

U N W

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice; and if repentance utter not in, prayer will never find admittance. Dappa.
When the fleece is thorn, if sweat remains Unwash'd, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryden.
UNWASTED. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.
Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood,
Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood
Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread,
And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackmore.
UNWASTING. adj. Not growing less; not decaying.
Purest love's unwasting treasure;
Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
Sacred Hymen! these are thine. Pope.
UNWAYED. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.
Beasts that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwayed, and will not go at all. Suckl.
UNWEAKENED. adj. Not weakened.
By reason of the exhalation of some air out of the glass, the elical power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unweakened pressure of the external air. Boyle.
UNWEAPONED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.
As the beards are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against un-weaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.
UNWEARABLE. adj. Not to be tired.
Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them un-wearable. Hooker, b. i.
UNWEARIED. adj.
1. Not tired; not fatigued.
The Creator from his work
Desisting, though unwearied, up return'd. Milton.
Their bloody talk unwearied, still they ply. Waller.
Still th' unwearied fire pursues the tuneful strain. Dryden.
2. Indefatigable; continual; not to be spent; not sinking under fatigue.
Joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire,
Through the wide compass of the airy coast,
And with unwearied limbs each part enquire. Spenser.
Godlike his unwearied bounty flows;
First loves to do, then loves the good he does. Denham.
A winged virtue through th' ethereal sky,
From orb to orb, unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.
An unwearied devotion in the service of God, recommended the gospel to the world.
The righteous shall certainly be saved, but then the christian character of a righteous man implies a constant, unwearied performance in many painful instances of duty.
To UNWEARY. v. a. To refresh after weariness.
It unwaries, and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.
UNWED. adj. Unmarried.
This servitude makes you to keep unwed. Shakespeare.
UNWEDGABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.
Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.
UNWEED. adj. Not cleared from weeds.
Fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to seed; things rank, and gross in nature,
Possess it merely. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
UNWEED. adj. Not lamented. Now unwept.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.
UNWEETING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.
Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
As all unweeting of that well she knew;
And pained himself with busy care to rear
Her out of careless swoon. Fairy Queen, b. i.
But contrary, unweeting he fulfilled
The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd
Of the most high. Paradise Regain'd.
UNWEIGHED. adj.
1. Not examined by the balance.
Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings, vii.
2. Not considered; negligent.
What unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakespeare.
Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unweigh'd,
Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress'd.
Of human race the wisest, and the best. Pope's Ode, &c.
UNWEIGHING. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.
Wife! why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Shakespeare.
UNWELCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

U N W

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Soon as th' unwelcome news
From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
All were who heard. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham's Sophy.
Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve. Dryden.
From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.
Such hasty nights as these, would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley's Sermons.
UNWELT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.
Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne:
A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the funeral flame;
By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.
UNWET. adj. Not moist.
Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwept;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first adrift within thy tomb. Dryden.
UNWHIPPED. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.
Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipped of justice. Shakespeare. K. Lear.
Once I caught him in a lie;
And then, unwhipped, he had the grace to cry. Pope.
UNWHOLESOME. adj.
1. Infalubrious; mischievous to health.
The discovery of the disposition of the air, is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.
There I a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I find amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.
How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome before they are brought to him? South.
Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them; while the heats last. Milford on Italy.
Children born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. Archbishop of Dint.
2. Corrupt; tainted.
We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, watery pumpion: we'll teach him to know turtles from fays. Shakespeare.
UNWIELDY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.
Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.
UNWIELDINESS. n. s. Heaviness; difficulty to move; or be moved.
To what a cumbersome unweildiness,
And burdensome corpulence my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon
That which love worst endures, discretion. Donne.
The supposed unweildiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.
UNWIELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.
An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, unweildy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits, carried him out of the world. Clarendon.
Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Unwieldy fims of wealth, which higher mount,
Than files of marshal'd figures can account. Dryden.
Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails,
Reboulding harmless from the platted scales;
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crust'd all around. Addison's Ovid.
What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy lop-pings of a branchy tree at once? Watts's Impr. of the Mind.
UNWILLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.
The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker, b. v.
If thou dost find him tractable,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

UNW

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.
Heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'rful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.
UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with good-will; not without loath-
ness.

The whining school-boy, with his fatchel,
And frowning morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school. Shaksp. As You Like It.
A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton's Agonistes.

By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.
These men were once the prince's foes, and then Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.
The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.

UNWILLINGNESS. n. f. Loathsomeness; disinclination.
Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker, b. v.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since, an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad, lest she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

TO UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.
1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.
All his subjects having by some years learned, so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound to deeply an entered vice. Sidney, b. ii.

Empirick politicians use deceit:
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.
Desiring to serve God as they ought; but being not so skillful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snarers of glozing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker, b. v.

As you unwind her love from him,
Left it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shaksp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

TO UNWIND. v. n. To admit evolution.
Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNWIPED. adj. Not cleared.
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shaksp. Macbeth.

UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.
O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chafe an officer? Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shaksp. Macbeth.
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.

This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wife and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, slothful, or unwise,
Each private man for public good should rise. Dryden.

When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWISELY. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.
Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser East
Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

TO UNWISH. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.
My liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shaksp. Henry IV.

UNW

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.
UNWISHED. adj. Not fought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the inevitable Philoclea, but that her unwish'd presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwish'd yoke
My foul consents not to give lov'reignty. Shaksp. Henry IV.
While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam;
The best of brothers at his natal home
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWISHT. adj. Unthought of; not known. Spenser.
To UNWISHT. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then, but now,
As if some planet had unwisht men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts. Shaksp. Henry IV.

UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.
Wherefore did nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton.

UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.
Credly plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confels
What the Shires vigour unwithstood, Cou'd do in rigid fight. Philips.

UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting evidence; wanting notice.
Least their zeal to the cause should any way be unwit-ness'd. Hooker.

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unswettingly, from unswetting.]
Without knowledge; without consciousness.
In these fatal things it falls out, that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessory to their determinations. Sidney.

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker, b. i.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a deperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

UNWOUND. adj.
1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.
His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwound sun to view. Fairy Queen.

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwound
Which now came from him. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Every unwound meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanville.
Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwound change appear. Dryden.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.
Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefastness pleasant, and pleasure shamefast, tenderly moved her feet, unwound to feel the naked ground. Sidney, b. ii.

Sea calves unwound to fresh waters fly. Mog.
O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas
Rough with black winds and storms, Unwound shall admire. Milton.

UNWORKING. adj. Living without labour.
Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it. Locke.

UNWORKSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.
He resolv'd to leave
Unworkshipp'd, unobey'd the throne supreme. Milton.

UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.
I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast intail'd. Shaksp. Henry VI.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the man,
I gave him gentle looks. Shaksp. Henry IV.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Brown.

UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.
A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney, b. ii.

UNY

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrongs, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness; it nothing tends us
To chide him from our caves, for he persists. Shaksp. Henry IV.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.

UNWORTHY. adj.
1. Not deserving.
The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use, the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard founding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knoles.

2. Wanting merit.
Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthy shews as fairly in the mask. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Whitgift.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Mist that which one unworthy may attain;
And die with grieving. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

3. Mean.
Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd?
did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney.

4. Not suitable; not adequate.
I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.

Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.

Care is taken to interperfe additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.

5. Unbecoming; vile.
The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.

UNWOUND. part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Unwound.
Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitch'd ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNWOUNDED. adj.
1. Not wounded.
We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.

2. Not hurt.
Oh! blest with temper:
She who can love a sifter's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.

TO UNWREATH. v. a. To untwine.
The barks of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.

UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.
The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molest. Arbuthnot.

UNWRITTEN. adj. Not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.
A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South's Sermons.

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten. Hale.

UNWORKED. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.
Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwork'd. Fairfax.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwork'd and easy to the potter's hand:
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden.

UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.
They that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring. Shaksp. Hamlet.

UNYIELD. adj. Not given up.
O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyield as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.

TO UNYUKE. v. a.
1. To loose from the yoke.
Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful fleers unyu'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shaksp. Henry IV.

VOC

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyu'd the mules. Brooks.

2. To part; to disjoin.
Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret. Shaksp. Macbeth.

UNYUKE. adj.
1. Having never worn a yoke.
Sev'n bullocks yet unyu'd for Pheebus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes. Dryden.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.
I will a-while uphold
The unyu'd humour of your idleness. Shaksp. Henry IV.

UNZONED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.
Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.

VOCABULARY. n. f. [vocabulary, Lat. vocabularium, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word book.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtiler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabula-ries and dictionaries of several forts. Watts.

VOCAL. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Lat.]
1. Having a voice.
Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious show! O let them fall,
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crosby.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade;
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton.

Smooth-sliding Minicius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.
Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.
They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker.

And join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton's Par. Lost.

VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Lat. from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.
L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritaly. Holder.

TO VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.
It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; and other thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx, to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.
Although it is as natural to mankind, to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, Fr. vocatio, Lat.]
1. Calling by the will of God.
Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker, b. v.

They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker, b. v.

2. Summons.
What can be urged for them who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment.
He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the sight of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney, b. i.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shaksp. Henry VI.

God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

A whore in her vocation,
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

VOCATIVE. n. f. [vocatif, Fr. vocativus, Lat.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOI

VOCIFERA'TION. n. f. [vociferatio, vocifero, Lat.] Clamour; outcry.
The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbutnot.
VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Lat.] Clamorous; noisy.
Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confest'd they were forced to laugh. Pope.
VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, Fr. from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode.
It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's faintship from the vogue of the world. South.
Use may revive the obsolete words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.
What fashions th' have, and what they drive at
In publick vogues, or what in private. Hudibras.
In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.
No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.
At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to fiddle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
VOICE. n. f. [vox, Fr. vois, Lat.]
1. Sound emitted by the mouth.
2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.
Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
3. Any sound made by breath.
O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.
4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.
Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakespeare.
I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knolles.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy voices, and elect by voice. Dryden.
To VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd to regardfully? Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
It was voiced that the king purpos'd to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the tower; whereat there was great murmur. Bacon's Hen. VII.
Many fought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Daniel's Civil War.
2. To vote.
Your minds, pre-occupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul. Shakespeare.
To VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.
Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.
It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South's Sermons.
VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.
That's Erythraea
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul
Would fain go out to meet and welcome her! Denham.
VOID. adj. [voides, Fr.]
1. Empty; vacant.
The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Genesis i. 2.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. Shakespeare.
2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.
If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in?
My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isa. lv. 11.
This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and pulled down. Bacon.
Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this, or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

VOL

The two houses declared, that nothing which should front that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon, b. viii.
Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.
3. Unfurnished; unoccupied.
Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Clarendon.
4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitefield.
How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Dryden.
Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain. Swift.
5. Unsubstantial; unreal.
Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain. Pope.
VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.
With what power
Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illimitable void? Thomson.
To VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; voides, Fr.]
1. To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shakespeare. Hen. V.
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassin gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Watson's Buckingham.
2. To emit; to pour out.
The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix. Wilkins.
3. To emit as excrement.
Excrements smell ill to the same creature that voideth them; and the cat burieth what she voideth. Bacon.
Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.
By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Wijeman's Surgery.
Fleishy filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbutnot.
4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.
It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed. Clarendon.
VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.
If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona notabilia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayl.
VOIDER. n. f. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Cleveland.
VOIDNESS. n. f. [from void.]
1. Emptiness; vacancy.
2. Nullity; inefficacy.
3. Want of substantiality.
If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days. Hale.
VOITURE. n. f. [French.] Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.
They ought to use exercise by voiture or carriage. Arbutnot.
VOLANT. adj. [volans, Lat. volans, Fr.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The volant, or flying automata, are such mechanical contrivances as have a self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Wilkins's Matb. Magick.
2. Nimble; active.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low, and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.
Blind British bards, with volant touch,
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels. Philips.
VOLATILE. adj. [volatilis, Lat.]
1. Flying; passing through the air.
The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings; because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air. Ray on the Creation.
2. [Volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.
In vain, though by their pow'ful art they bind Volatile Hermes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
When

VOL

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fix'd and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.
3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit.
Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life. Swift.
VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.
The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLATILENESS. n. f. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]
VOLATILITY. n. f. [volatilité, Fr. from volatile.]
1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.
Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or plantiness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.
Of volatility, the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning.
Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.
The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatility, be discovered to the sense. Hale.
The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton's Opticks.
By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbutnot.
2. Mutability of mind.
VOLATILIZATION. n. f. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.
Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.
To VOLATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.
Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton's Opticks.
Spirituos liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that it rather condenses them. Arbutnot on Aliments.
VOLE. n. f. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks. Past fix, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.
VOLCANO. n. f. [Italian, from vulcan.] A burning mountain.
Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos, and fiery hills. Brown.
When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcano's gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.
Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley's Sermons.
VOLERY. n. f. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.
An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.
VOLITATION. n. f. [volito, Lat.] The act or power of flying.
Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
VOLITION. n. f. [volition, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.
There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. South's Sermons.
Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.
VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.
They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.
VOLLEY. n. f. [volte, Fr.]
1. A flight of shot.
From the wood a volley of shot flew two of his company. Raleigh's Apology.

VOL

More on his guns relies, than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.
2. A burst; an emission of many at once.
A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakespeare.
Disfrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.
To VOLLEY. v. n. To throw out.
The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
VOLLED. adj. [from volley.] Disposed; discharged with a volley.
I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed. Milton.
The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, dislever'd, scud. Philips.
VOLTE. n. f. [volte, Fr.] Volte signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center. Farrier's Dict.
VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilité, Fr. volubilitas, from volubilis, Lat.]
1. The act or power of rolling.
Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts's Logic.
Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility, turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i.
2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.
Say the be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.
He express'd himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.
He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.
She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.
3. Mutability; lability to revolution.
He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next: and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.
VOLUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Lat.]
1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.
Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.
The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or, by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.
2. Rolling; having quick motion.
This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there. Milton.
Then voluble, and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.
A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.
These with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echo's. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.
Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscionable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakespeare.
If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakespeare.
VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Lat.]
1. Something rolled, or convolved.
2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.
Threecore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.
Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he fails:
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.
Thames' fruitful tides,
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play. Fenton.
By

VOL

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watery particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Cheyne.

3. [Volume, Fr.] A book; so called, because books were antiently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed My leisure, so long leaves her to repeat. Fairy Queen.

Calmly, I do beseech you—
Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakespeare.
I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume. Locke.

If one short volume could comprize
All that was witty, learn'd and wise:
How would it be esteem'd and read? Swift.

VOLUMINOUS, adj. [from volume.]

1. Consisting of many complications.

The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.

2. Consisting in many volumes, or books.

If heav'n write aught of fate, by what the fairs
Voluminous, or single characters. Milton.

In their conjunction met, give me to spell.
There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without perusing the world with voluminous transcriptions. Grant's Bills of Mortality.

3. Copious; diffusive.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spectator, N^o 124.

VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. [from voluminous.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.

VO'UNTARILY, adv. [voluntarius, Fr. from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker, b. v.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY, adj. [volontaire, Fr. voluntarius, Lat.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent;
intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker, b. i.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakespeare.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

Then virtue was no more, her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Done without compulsion.

Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakespeare, As You Like It.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but vol- untary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed's Sermon.

4. Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.

The public prayers of the people of God in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporal wit. Hooker, b. v.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VO'UNTARY, n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries. Shakespeare.
Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impres. Shakespeare.

The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies's Ireland.

Aids came in partly upon voluntaries, and partly voluntaries
from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of musick play'd at will, without any settled rule.

Whistling winds, like organs, play'd,
Until their voluntaries made. Chaucer.

The waken'd earth in odours rife,
To be her morning sacrifice. Chaucer.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepar'd for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator, N^o 630.

VOM

VOLUNTEER, n. f. [volontaire, Fr.] A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapic, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collins.

All Asia now was by the ears;
And Gods beat up for volunteers. Prior.

To VOLUNTEER, v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking.
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUPTUARY, n. f. [voluptuarius, Fr. voluptuarius, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who liv'd like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, n. f. [voluptuosus, Lat. voluptuosus, Fr.]

Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread.
The one is the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is the giving license to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign.
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains,
Soft'ned with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley's Sermons.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shake.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away, and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, n. f. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriolness; ad-dictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Here where still ev'ning is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Dante.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless
Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTE, n. f. [volute, Fr.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus;
whence that antient architect calls the volute pulvinus. Harris.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Trans-verere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO'LVIC, n. f. [Latin.] An encysted humour in the lungs;
if the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a voenic, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the voenic communicating with the vessels of the lungs, the must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. A. Boissac on Diet.

VO'LVIC NUT, n. f. The nucleus of a fruit of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubinum, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken

VOT

taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill's Mat. Medica.

To VOMIT, v. n. [vomo, Latin.]

1. To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. Mere.

To VOMIT, v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach.

1. Hast thou found honey? eat so much as is sufficient, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. Provo. xxv. 16.

The fifth vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah ii.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseman's Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbutnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VOMIT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetic medicine; a medicine that causes vomit.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances, if there be any symptoms of an inflammation of the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbut.

VOMITION, n. f. [from vomit, Lat.] The act or power of vomitting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew's Cosmology.

VOMITIVE, adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetic; causing vomit.

From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitivus, occasion black ejections. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

VOMITORY, adj. [vomitorius, Fr. vomitorius, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetic.

Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitatory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitatives privately. Harvey on Consumptions.

VORACIOUS, adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; cadacious.

So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Government of the Tongue.

VORACIOUSLY, adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS, n. f. [voracitas, Fr. voracitas, Lat. from voracity.] racius. Greediness; ravenousness; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham's Physico-Theology.

VORTEX, n. f. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fix'd stars; yet these, and all their parts would, by their tenacity and stiffness, communicate their motion to one another. Newton's Opticks.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley's Sermons.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng;
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess. Pope.

VORTICAL, adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton's Opticks.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

VO'VARY, n. f. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship;
votary.

I with a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of St. Clare. Shakespeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here?
Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold!
No, gods, I am no idle votary. Shakespeare.

The grey-hooded ev'n,
Like a sad votary in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

VOU

VO'TARY, n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakespeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary.

No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee,
Myself a melting sacrifice. Crashaw.

By these means, men worship the idols have been set up in their minds, and stamp the characters of divinity upon abur-dities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and mon-kies. Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries, among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers's Sermons.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?
Know't thou not yet, that men commence
Thy votaries for want of sense. Swift.

VO'TARY, adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bac.

VO'TARESS, n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial vot'ress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakespeare.

His mother was a vot'ress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

No rotary this vot'ress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleveland.

Thy vot'ress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her vot'ress from above. Pope.

VOTE, n. f. [votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscommon.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession?
as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be sway'd by the superior weight of reason. Watts.

To VOTE, v. a.

1. To chuse by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master; but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.

VO'TER, n. f. [from vot.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.

He hates an action base;
Can sometimes drop a voter's claim,
And give up party to his fame. Swift.

VO'TIVE, adj. [votivus, Lat.] Given by vow.

Such in Isis' temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd. Dryden.

Venus! take my votive glass;
Since I am not what I was,
What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see. Prior.

To VOUCH, v. a. [voucher, Norman French.]

1. To call to witness; to attest.

The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to maintain.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making 'Tis given with welcome. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.

To VOUCH, v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness;
to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so folemnly affirmed. Swift.

30 C Vouch.

VOW

Vouch. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.
What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shakep. Othello.
VOUCHER. n. f. [from vouch.] One who gives witness to any thing.
Better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needful voucher? Shakep. Coriolanus.
The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.
All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator, N. 253.
I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them, which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.
TO VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]
1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.
2. To condescend to grant.
He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.
Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? —
Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakep. Measure.
But if the sense of touch seem such delight
Beyond all other, think the same vouchsafed
To cattle and each beast. Milton.
It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those, to whom the found of the gospel never reached. South's Sermons.
TO VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.
Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weigh'd by wisdom and virtue? doth not the vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney, b. ii.
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakep. Rich. III.
Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.
VOUCHSAFE. n. f. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.
The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable perfections. Boyle.
Vow. n. f. [vovus, Fr. votum, Lat.]
1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions is consecrated to a particular purpose.
The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings. Shakep. Measure.
If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.
She vows for his return, with vain devotion, pays. Dryd.
2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke.
Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.
TO VOW. v. a. [vouer, Fr. vovus, Lat.] To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.
David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.
To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.
Vow and pay unto the Lord. Pf. lxxvi.
When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.
Whoever fees these irreligious men,
With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint. Davies.
This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd:
And last, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.
TO VOW. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.
Dost see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone; but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

UP

Vo'wel. n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.
I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel; which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl. fl. and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, rifle. Haller.
Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Breane.
VOWELL. n. f. [vow and follow.] One bound by the same vow.
Who are the votaries,
That are vowefollows with this virtuous king? Shakep.
VOYAGE. n. f. [voyage, Fr.]
1. A travel by sea.
Guyon forward 'gan his voyage make,
With his black palmer, that him guided still. Fairy Queen.
Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas.
This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were allay'd, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose. Prior.
2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.
If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakep. Measure.
If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakep. Cymbeline.
3. The practice of travelling.
All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.
TO VOYAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.
For voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Thus refus'd 'timpair the baneful trust. Pope's Odyssey.
TO VOYAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.
I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton's Par. Lost.
VOYAGER. n. f. [voyageur, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by sea.
Disdain not in thy constant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring.
How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Dome.
Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
A private voyager I pass the main. Pope's Odyssey.
UP. adv. [up, Saxon; op, Dutch and Danish.]
1. Aloft; on high; not down.
From those two Mytilene brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things, now up now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,
Or longitude. Milton.
2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.
Helen was not up? was she? Shakep. Measure.
His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him; his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.
3. In the state of being risen from a feat.
Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.
4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.
Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,
Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane. Dryden.
5. In a state of being built.
Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow I — well, all's one for that. Shakep.
6. Above the horizon.
As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges ix.
7. To a state of advancement.
Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.
8. In a state of exaltation.
Those that were up themselves, kept others low;
Those that were low themselves held others hard;
Ne suffered them to rise, or greater grow. Fairy Queen.
Henry the fifth is crown'd; up vanity!
Down royal state! all you sage counsellors hence. Shakep.
9. In a state of climbing.
In a state of infurrection.
The gentle archbishop of York is up Shakep. Hen. IV.
With well-appointed powers. Milton's Par. Lost.
Rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakep. Measure.

UPB

Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,
And mans each part about me. Dryden.
11. In a state of being increased, or raised.
Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.
As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.
13. From younger to elder years.
I am ready to die from my youth up. Pf. lxxxviii.
14. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.
Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.
15. Up and down. Backward and forward.
Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker, b. v.
The skipping king he rambl'd up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakep. Measure.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again:
Then nimble shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel.
Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen Wing silently the buxom air. Milton.
On this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton.
What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.

18. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.
She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wife:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.
19. It is added to verbs, implying some accumulation, or increase.
If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
20. Up, interject.
21. A word exhorting to rise from bed.
Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.
22. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.
Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore;
Up, grisly ghosts; and up my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more. Spenser.
But up, and enter now into full bliss.
Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait you,
And long to call you chief. Dryden.
UP. prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.
In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary; in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

 Through which into the world the dawning day
 Might look, that maketh every creature glad, Uprose Sir Gyon. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising. Ps. cxxxix.
 Uprose the virgin with the morning light,
 Obedient to the vision of the night. Pope.
 2. To rise from below the horizon.
 Uprose the sun. Cowley.
 3. To rise with acclivity.
 Was that the king that spur'd his horse so hard Against the steep uprising of the hill? Shakespeare.
 UPRISE. n. f. Appearance above the horizon.
 Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
 That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise? Shakespeare.
 UPROAR. n. f. [uproer, Dutch. This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult; bustle; disturbance; confusion.
 The Jews which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts xviii. 5.
 It were well if his holiness had not set the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Raleigh.
 He levied forces in a disorder'd uproar, albeit the treason rested in him and some other his complices. Hayward.
 Others with vast Typhaean rage more fell,
 Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
 In whirlwind; hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.
 Horror thus prevail'd,
 And wild uproar! ah, who at length will end
 This long pernicious fray? Philips.
 The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar; and made Socrates, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Addison.
 TO UPROAR. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw into confusion.
 Not in use.
 Had I power, I should
 Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
 Uproar the universal peace, confound
 All unity on earth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 TO UPROOT. v. a. [up and root.] To tear up by the root.
 Mean upstarts, when they come once to be preferred, forget their fathers. L'Estrange.
 And trees uprooted left their place,

UPS

Sequacious of the lyre:
 But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher;
 When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
 An angel heard, and straight appear'd,
 Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.
 TO UPSURSE. v. a. [up and surse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action.
 Thou art upsur'd by some distemperature. Shakespeare.
 UPSHOT. n. f. [up and shot.] Conclusion; end; last amount; final event.
 With this he kindleth his ambitious spight
 To like desire and praise of noble fame,
 The only upshot, whereto he doth aim. Hubbard's Tale.
 I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shak.
 In this upshot, purposes mistook
 Fall on th' inventor's heads. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. More.
 Upon the upshot, affections are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.
 Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet: here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbutnot.
 At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the fame or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoy'd to eternity. Pope.
 UPSIDE DOWN. [an adverbial form of speech.] With total reverberation; in complete disorder; with the lower part above the higher.
 In his lap a mass of coin he told,
 And turned upside down to feed his eye,
 And covetous desire, with his huge treasure. Fairy Queen.
 The flood did not to turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreed. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 The severe notions of christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprize and amazement. They came upon the world, like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.
 UPSPRING. n. f. [up and spring.] This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted.
 The king doth wake to-night, and takes his route;
 Keeps wassail, and the swagg'ring upspring reels. Shakespeare.
 TO UPSTAND. v. n. [up and stand.] To be erected.
 Sea calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
 The water snakes with scales upstanding die. Moy.
 TO UPSTAY. v. a. [up and stay.] To sustain; to support.
 Them the upstays.
 Gently with myrtle band; mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flow'r. Milton.
 TO UPSTART. v. n. [up and start.] To spring up suddenly.
 He upstart brave
 Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay,
 As eagle fresh out of the ocean wave. Spenser.
 Thus having spoke, he sat; thus answer'd then,
 Upstarting from his throne, the king of men,
 His breast with fury fill'd. Dryden.
 UPSTART. n. f. [up and start.] One suddenly raised to wealth, power, or honour; what suddenly rises and appears.
 Two hundred in a place will be enough for the safeguard of that country, and keeping under all sudden upstarts, that shall seek to trouble the peace thereof. Spenser's Ireland.
 My rights and royalties
 Pluckt from my arms perforce, and given away
 To upstart unthrifts. Shakespeare.
 Mushrooms have two strange properties; the one, that they yield so delicious a meat; the other, that they come up so hastily, even in a night, and yet they are unknown, and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms.
 The king did not neglect Ireland, the soil where these mushrooms and upstart weeds, that spring up in a night, did chiefly prosper. Bacon.
 A place of bliss
 In the purlieus of heav'n, and therein plac'd
 A race of upstart creatures, to supply
 Perhaps our vacant room. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
 Inordinate desires,
 And upstart passions, catch the government
 From reason. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Mean upstarts, when they come once to be preferred, forget their fathers. L'Estrange.
 Trade,

URC

Trade, he said, carried from us the commodities of our country, and made a parcel of upstarts, as rich as men of the most ancient families. Addison's Freeholder, N° 22.
 TO UPSWARM. v. a. [up and swarm.] To raise in a swarm; Out of use.
 You've taken up the subjects of my father;
 And both against the voice of heav'n and him
 Have here upswarm'd them. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
 TO UPRAKE. v. a. [up and rake.] To take into the hands.
 He hearkned to his reason, and the child
 Uptaking, to the palmer gave to bear. Fairy Queen.
 TO UPTRAIN. v. a. [up and train.] To bring up; to educate. Not used.
 King Lear in happy peace long reign'd,
 But had no issue male him to succeed,
 But three fair daughters, which were well uptrain'd
 In all that seem'd fit for kingly feed. Fairy Queen.
 TO UPURN. v. a. [up and turn.] To throw up; to furrow.
 So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
 His nostrils wide into the murky air. Milton.
 Beyond all marks, with many a giddy round
 Down rushing, it upturns a hill of ground. Pope.
 UPWARD. adv. [up and year, Saxon.] Directed to a higher part.
 Spread upon a lake, with upward eye,
 A plump of fowl behold their foe on high. Dryden.
 The angel said,
 With upward speed his agile wings he spread. Prior.
 UPWARD. n. f. The top. Out of use.
 From th' extremest upward of thy head,
 To the descent and dust below thy foot,
 A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
 UPWARDS. adv. [up and year, Saxon.]
 1. Towards a higher place.
 I thought
 To smooth your passage, and to soften death:
 For I would have you, when you upward move,
 Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.
 In sheets of rain the sky descends,
 And ocean swell'd with waters upwards tends;
 One rising, falling one; the heav'n and sea
 Meet at their confines, in the middle way. Dryden.
 A man on a cliff, is at liberty to leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upwards, for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.
 2. Towards heav'n and God.
 Looking inward, we are stricken dumb; looking upward,
 we speak and prevail. Hooker, b. v.
 3. With respect to the higher part.
 Dagon, sea-monster! upward man,
 And downward fish. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number.
 Their counsel must seem very uncalonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own accounts, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away suspicion. Hooker, b. v.
 I have been your wife in this obedience
 Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
 With many children by you. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
 5. Towards the source.
 Be Homer's works your study;
 Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring,
 And trace the mules upward to their spring. Pope.
 TO UPWARD. v. a. pret. and pass. upward. [up and wind.] To convolve.
 As the lay upon the dirty ground,
 Her huge long tail her den all overspread;
 Yet was in knots and many boughs upwind. Fa. Queen.
 URBANITY. n. f. [urbanité, Fr. urbanitas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.
 A useful severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 Raillery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estr.
 Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.
 URBIN. n. f. [beureuchin, Armorick; erimaceus, Lat.]
 1. A hedge-hog.
 Urcin shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
 All exercise on thee. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
 Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urcins,
 Would make such fearful and confused cries,
 As any mortal body, hearing it,
 Would straight fall mad. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.
 That nature designs the preservation of the more infirm creatures, by the defensive armour it hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedge-hog, or urchin. Ray.

URG

2. A name of slight anger to a child.
 Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride;
 And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cry'd.
 'Tis Cloe's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
 Friend Howard's genius fancy'd all the rest. Prior.
 URG. n. f. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.
 Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in ure for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.
 He would keep his hand in ure with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.
 URETER. n. f. [uretero, Fr.] Ureters are two long and small canals from the basin of the kidneys, one on each side. They lie between the doubling of the peritonaeum, and descending in the form of an S, pierce the bladder near its neck, where they run first some space betwixt its coats, and then they open in its cavity. Their use is to carry the urine from the kidneys to the bladder. Whiny.
 The kidneys and ureters serve for expurgation. Weyman.
 URETHRA. n. f. [uretra, Fr.] The passage of the urine.
 Caruncles are loose flesh, arising in the urethra. Weyman.
 TO URGE. v. a. [urges, Lat.]
 1. To incite; to push.
 You do mistake your business: my brother
 Did urge me in his act. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
 He pleaded still not guilty;
 The king's attorney, on the contrary,
 Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,
 Of divers witnesses. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
 What I have done my safety urg'd me to. Shakespeare.
 This urges me to fight, and fires my mind. Dryden.
 High Epidaurus urges on my speed,
 Fam'd for his hills, and for his horses breed. Dryden.
 The heathens had but uncertain apprehensions of what urges men most powerfully to forsake their sins.
 He, seiz'd with horror, in the shades of night,
 Through the thick darkness headlong urg'd his flight. Pope.
 2. To provoke; to exasperate.
 Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
 But think upon my grief. Shakespeare.
 3. To follow close, so as to impell.
 Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou have?
 Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave. Pope.
 4. To labour vehemently.
 5. To press; to enforce.
 The enemy's in view; draw up your powers;
 Your haste is now urg'd on you. Shakespeare.
 Urge your petitions in the street. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.

 6. To press as an argument.
 Urge the necessity and state of times,
 And be not peevish. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
 7. To importune; to solicit.
 He urg'd fore,
 With piercing words and pitiful implore,
 Him hasty to arise. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 8. To press in opposition, by way of objection.
 Though every man have a right in dispute to urge a false religion, with all its absurd consequences; yet it is barbarous incivility scurrilously to sport with that which others account religion. Tillotson.
 TO URGE. v. n. To press forward.
 A palace, when 'tis that which it should be,
 Stands such, or else decays:
 But he which dwells there is not so; for he Strives to urge upward, and his fortune raises. Donne.
 URGENT. n. f. [from urgent.] Pressure of difficulty or necessity.
 Being for some hours extremely press'd by the necessities of nature, I was under great difficulties between urgency and shame. Gulliver's Travels.
 URGENT. adj. [urgent, Fr. urgens, Lat.]
 1. Cogent; pressing; violent.
 Things so ordained are to be kept; howbeit not necessarily, any longer than till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hooker, b. iv.
 Not alone
 The death of Fulvia, but more urgent touches,
 Do strongly speak 't us. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
 This ever hath been that true cause of more wars, than upon all other occasions, though it least partakes of the urgent necessity of state. Raleigh.
 Let a father seldom strike, but upon very urgent necessity, and as the last remedy. Locke on Education.
 2. Importunate; vehement in solicitation.
 The Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out in haste. Exod. xii. 33.

 I with Pope were as great an urges as I. Swift.
URGEWONDER. n. f. A sort of grain.
 This barley is called by some urgeswonder. Mortimer.
URIM. n. f.
Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradiction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles. Newton's Notes on Milton.
 He in celestial panoply, all arm'd
 Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought. Milton.
URINAL. n. f. [from urine, Fr. from urine.] A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.
 These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.
 A candle out of a mulket will pierce through an inch board, or an urinal force a nail through a plank. Brown.
 This hand, when glory calls,
 Can brandish arms, as well as urinals. Garth.
 Some with scimitars in their hands, and others with urinals, ran to and fro. Spectator, No 159.

 The urachus or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its contents. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 Diuretics that relax the urinary passages, should be tried before such as stimulate. Arbutnot on Aliments.
URINATIVE. adj. Working by urine; provoking urine.
 Medicines urinate do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
URINATOR. n. f. [from urinator, Fr. urinator, Lat.] A diver; one who searches under water.
 The precious things that grow there, as pearl, may be much more easily fetched up by the help of this, than by any other way of the urimators. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
 Those relations of urimators belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky. Ray.
URINE. n. f. [from urine, Fr. urina, Lat.] Animal water.
 Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Shakespeare.
 As though there were a femininity in urine, or that, like the feed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly believe we can visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 The chyle cannot pass by urine nor sweat. Arbutnot.
TO URINE. v. n. [from urine, Fr. from the noun.] To make water.
 Places where men urine commonly, have some smell of violets. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 No oviparous animal, which spawn or lay eggs, doth urine, except the tortoise. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
URINOUS. adj. [from urine.] Partaking of urine.
 The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.
URN. n. f. [from urna, Fr. urna, Lat.]
 1. Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.
 Minos, the strict inquisitor,
 Lives, and crimes, with his assessor, hears;
 Round, in his urn, the blended balls he rolls;
 Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.
 2. A water pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.
 The fish oppose the maid, the watery urn
 With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn. C. eccl.
 3. The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put.
 Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
 Tomblets, with no remembrance over them. Shakespeare.
 A rustick digging in the ground by Padua, found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn; and in this lesser, a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.
 His scatter'd limbs with my dead body burn;
 And once more join us in the pious urn. Dryden.
UROSCOPY. n. f. [from urine and scopos.] Inspection of urine.
 In this work, attempts will exceed performances; it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations, and uroscopy would permit. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
URRY. n. f. A mineral.
 In the coal-mines they dig a blue or black clay, that lies near the coal, commonly called urry, which is an unripe coal, and is very proper for hot lands, especially pasture-ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.
US. the oblique case of us.
 The lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. Dent. v.

 Which way
 Might'st thou deserve, or they impose this usage, Coming from us? Shakespeare. K. Lear.
 The lustre in your eye, heav'n in your cheeks,
 Plead you fair usage. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
 My brother
 Is prisoner to the bishop, at whose hands
 He hath good usage, and great liberty. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.
 What usage have I met with from this adversary, who passes by the very words I translated, and produces other passages; and then hectors and cries out of my dissimilarity. Still.
 Are not hawks brought to the hand, and to the lure; and lions reclaimed by good usage? L'Estrange.
 Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
 And Eurus never such hard usage found
 In his Æolian prison. Dryden.
 2. Custom; practice long continued.
 Of things once received and confirmed by use, long usage is a law sufficient. In civil affairs, when there is no other law, custom itself doth stand for law. Hooker, b. ii.
 3. Manners; behaviour. Obsolete.
 A gentle nymph was found,
 Hight Uffery, excelling all the crew,
 In courteous usage, and unstained hue. Spenser.

USELESS. adj. [from use.] Answering no purpose; having no end.
 So have I seen the lost clouds pour
 Into the sea an useless show'r;
 And the vex'd sailors curse the rain,
 For which poor shepherds pray'd in vain. Waller.
 The hurtful teeth of vipers are useless to us, and yet are parts of their bodies. Boyle.
 His friend, on whose assistance he most relied, either proves false and forsakes him, or looks on with an useless pity, and cannot help him. Rogers's Sermons.
 The waterman forlorn along the shore,
 Penive reclines upon his useless oar. Gay.
USER. n. f. [from use.] One who uses.
 Such things, which, by imparting the delight to others, makes the user thereof welcome, as music, dancing, hunting, feasting, riding. Sidney.
 My lord received from the countess of Warwick, a lady powerful in the court, and indeed a virtuous user of her power, the best advice that was ever given. Watson.
USHER. n. f. [from usher, Fr.]
 1. One whose business is to introduce strangers, or walk before a person of high rank.
 The wife of Antony
 Should have an army for an usher, and
 The neighs of horse to tell her approach Long ere she did appear. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 You make guards and ushers march before, and then enters your prince. Tatler, No 53.
 Gay paid his courtship with the crowd,
 As far as modest pride allow'd;
 Rejects a fervent usher's place,
 And leaves St. James's in disgrace. Swift.
 2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.
 Though grammar profits less than rhetoric's,
 Yet ev'n in those his usher claims a share. Dryden.
TO USHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to forerun.
 No fun shall ever usher forth my honours,
 Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
 The fun,
 Declin'd, was halting now with prone career
 To th' ocean illes, and in th' ascending scale
 Of heav'n, the stars, that usher evening, rose. Milton.
 As the deluge is represented a disruption of the abyss, so the future combustion of the earth is to be usher'd in, and accompanied with violent impressions upon nature, and the chief will be earthquakes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
 And with due honours usher in the May. Dryden.
 The Examiner was usher'd into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author. Addison.
 Oh name for ever sad! for ever dear!
 Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a tear. Pope.
USQUEBAUGH. n. f. [An Irish and Eric word, which signifies the water of life.] It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromatics; and the Irish fort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. USTION. n. f. [from ustio, Fr. ustus, Lat.] The act of burning; the state of being burned.
USTIOUS. adj. [from ustio, Latin.] Having the quality of burning.
 The power of a burning glass is by an ustious quality in the mirror or glass, arising from a certain unknown substantial form. Watts.
USUAL. adj. [from usus, Fr.] Common; frequent; customary; frequently occurring.
 Consultation with oracles was a thing very usual and frequent in their times.
 Could I the care of Providence deserve,
 Heav'n must destroy me, if it would preserve:
 And that's my fate, or sure it would have sent
 Some usual evil for my punishment. Dryden.
USUALLY.

U S U

USUALLY, adv. [from usual.] Commonly; frequently; customarily.
 If men's desires are usually as large as their abilities, what course we took to allure the former, by that we might engage the latter. South's Sermons.
 Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.
USUALNESS, n. f. [from usual.] Commonness; frequency.
USUCAPTION, n. f. [usus and capio, Lat.] In the civil law, the acquisition of the property of a thing, by possession and enjoyment thereof for a certain term of years prescribed by law. Dich.
USURU'CT. n. f. [usufructus, Fr. usus and fructus, Lat.] The temporary use; enjoyment of the profits, without power to alienate.
 The persons receiving the same, have only the usufruct thereof, and not any fee or inheritance therein. Ayliffe.
USURU'CTUARY, n. f. [usufructuarius, Fr. usufructuarius, Lat.] One that has the use and temporary profit, not the property of a thing.
 The persons of parishes are not in law accounted proprietors, but only usufructuaries, as having no right of fee simple vested in them. Ayliffe's Parergon.
TO USURE, n. f. [usura, Lat.] To practice usury; to take interest for money.
 Is this the balsam that the usuring senate
 Pours into captains wounds? Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
USURER, n. f. [usurier, Fr. usura, Lat.] One who puts money out at interest. Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.
 Fie; thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
 Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
 And usest none in that true use indeed,
 Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit. Shak.
 When usurers tell their gold i' th' field,
 And bawds and whores do churches build, Shakespeare.
 If thou lend money to any that is poor, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, nor lay upon him usury. Ex. xxii. 25.
 There may be no commutative injustice, while each retains a mutual benefit, the usurer for his money, the borrower for his industry. Child on Trade.
 The avarice usury occasioned great tumults among the people; yet he that took it was not reckoned to transgress any law; and there were some greedy usurers that exacted double, triple. Arbutnot on Coins.
USURIOUS, adj. [usuaire, Fr. from usury.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.
 For every hour that thou wilt spare me now,
 I will allow,
Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
 When with my brown my grey hairs equal be. Donne.
TO USURP, v. a. [usurper, Fr. usurper, Lat.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize, or possess without right.
 So ugly a darkness, as if it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right. Sidney, b. ii.
 Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful; or if lawful, then granted or consented unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God. Hooker.
 In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly behoveth the church to have always most special care, humane inventions usurp the room and title of divine worship. Hooker, b. v.
 Victorious prince of York!
 Before I see thee seated in that throne,
 Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
 These eyes shall never close. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
 Together with that fair and warlike form?
 Their fox-like thefts are so rank, as a man may find whole pages usurp'd from one author. B. Johnson.
 So he dies,
 But soon revives; death over him no pow'r
 Shall long usurp: ere the third dawning light
 Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
 Out of his grave. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 All fountains of the deep Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
 Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton.
 Farewell court,
 Where vice not only hath usurp'd the place,
 But the reward, and even the name of virtue. Denham.
 Your care about your banks infers a fear
 Of threatening floods and inundations near:
 If so, a just reproof would only be
 Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
 Who next usurps, will a just prince appear,
 So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.

U T I

Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
 And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous God;
 The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
 With more and far superior force he press'd,
 Commands his entrance, and, without controul,
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul. Dryden.
 Who's this, that dares usurp
 The guards and habit of Numidia's prince? Addison's Cato.
USURPATION, [usurpation, Fr. from usurp.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.
 The Piercies,
 Finding his usurpation most unjust,
 Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shakespeare.
 Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. K. Char.
 To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.
 O baseness to support a tyrant throne,
 And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
 Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
 To espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden.
 Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of K. James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.
USURPER, n. f. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.
 Ever since he hath continued his first usurped power,
 And now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.
 Richard duke of York,
 Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
 And that your majesty was an usurper. Shakespeare.
 But this usurper, his encroachment proud,
 Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends Siege and defiance. Milton.
 Few usurpers to the shades descend
 By a dry death, or with a quiet end.
 He griev'd, the land he freed should be oppress'd,
 And he less for it than usurpers do. Dryden.
USURPINGLY, adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.
 Lay aside the sword,
 Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
 And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
 Thy right royal sovereign. Shakespeare's K. John.
USURY, [usure, Fr. usura, Lat.]
 1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.
 He that high does sit, and all things see,
 With equal eyes, their merits to relore;
 Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
 And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Fairy Queen.
 The wished day is come at last,
 That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
 Pay to her usury of long delight. Spenser.
 Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing. Walton's Angler.
 What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.
Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end, most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.
UTENSIL, n. f. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.
 Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
 Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shaksp.
 Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
 And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.
 Tithes and lands given to God are never; and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated. South.
 The springs of life their former vigour feel;
 Such zeal he had for that vile utensil. Garrick's Dispensary.
UTERINE, adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.
 In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
 The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance. Ray.
UTERUS, n. f. [Latin.] The womb.
UTILITY, n. f. [utilite, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness.
 Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconstancy. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

U T T

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
 M. Zulichem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease. Temple.
UTIS, n. f. A word which probably is corrupted, at least, is not now understood.
 Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.
UTMOST, adj. [utmost, Saxon; from utcep.]
 1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.
 Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
 In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
 If ought do touch the utmost thread of it,
 She feels it instantly on e'er'y side. Davies.
 As far remov'd from God and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 I went
 To view the utmost limits of the land. Dryden.
 2. Being in the highest degree.

 Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
 In peace, to his utmost peril. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
UTMOST, n. f. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree.
 What miseries,
 Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
 To the utmost of a man. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 I will be free,
 Even to the utmost as I please in words. Shakespeare.
 Such a confidence, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon. South.
 Try your fortune.—
 —I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate Without just cause? Dryden's All for Love.
 A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests. Locke.
 The enemy thinks of raising threecore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes. Addison.
UTTER, adj. [utter, Saxon.]
 1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the center.
 In my flight
 Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
 I sung of chaos, and eternal night. Milton's P. Lost, b. iii.
 2. Placed without any compass; out of any place.
 Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out
 From all heav'n's bounds, into the utter deep. Milton.
 3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here.
 Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
 For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
 In utter darkness; and their portion set
 As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milton.
 4. Complete; irrevocable.
 The parliament thought the utter taking it away, absolutely necessary for the preservation of the kingdom. Clarendon.
 There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon, b. viii.
 They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.
TO UTTER, v. a. [from the adjective; to make publick, or let out; palam facere.]
 1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.
 Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.
 These very words I've heard him utter. Shakespeare.
 There's more gold: but, firrah,
 We lay the dead as well. Bring it to that,
 The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakespeare.
 Conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood. Isa. lix. 13.
 Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart? Job viii. 10.
 Who knows but his poor, bleeding heart,
 Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
 And the last words he utter'd, call'd me cruel! Addison.

V U L

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.
 When do partial and finisler affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many? Whitby.
 Were it folly to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world?
 I meant my words should not reach your ears; but what I utter'd was most true. Dryden's All for Love.
 3. To sell; to vend.
 Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
 Is death to any he that utters them. Shaksp. Rom. and Juliet.
 They bring it home, and utter it commonly by the name of Newfoundland fish. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
 The Devonshire and Somersetshire graiers feed yearly great droves of cattle in the north quarter of Cornwall, and utter them at home. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 4. To disperse; to emit at large.
 To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to receive or utter this fatal coin. Swift.
UTTERABLE, adj. [from utter.] Expressible; such as may be uttered.
UTTERANCE, n. f. [from utter.]
 1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.
 He, with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
 From point to point discours'd his voyage. Fa. Queen.
 2. [Ourance, Fr.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility.
 Of him I gather'd honour;
 Which he to seek of me again perforce,
 Behoves me keep at utterance. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
 Mine eternal jewel
 Giv'n the common enemy of man,
 To make them kings; the seed of Banquo kings!
 Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
 And champion me to th' utterance. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.
 'Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
 At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd. Milton.
 Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by content several determinate significancies. Holder.
 There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
 Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor utterance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling. Watts.
UTTERER, n. f. [from utter.]
 1. One who pronounces.

 God, whose property is to shew his mercies then greatest, when they are nearest to be utterly despair'd. Hooker, b. iv.
 Arguments taken from the authority of men, may not only so far forth as hath been declared, but further also be of some force in human sciences; which force, be it never so small, doth shew that they are not utterly naught. Hooker, b. ii.
 All your interest in those territories
 Is utterly bereft you; all is lost. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
 He was so utterly tired with an employment so contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it. Clarendon, b. viii.
 While in the flesh we cannot be utterly infensible of the afflictions that befall us. Atterbury.
UTTERMOST, adj. [from utter.]
 1. Extreme; being in the highest degree.
 Bereave me not,
 Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
 Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress. Milton.
 2. Most remote.
 The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Peru side, did go towards the south. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
UTTERMOST, n. f. The greatest degree.
 There needed neither promise nor persuasion to make her do her uttermost for her father's service. Sidney, b. ii.
 He cannot have sufficient honour done unto him; but the uttermost we can do, we must. Hooker, b. i.
UVEOUS, adj. [from uva, Lat.]
 The uveous coat, or iris of the eye, hath a mucous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil. Ray on the Creation.
VULCANO, n. f. [Italian.] A burning mountain; volcano.
 Earth calcin'd, flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in vulcano's, will be carried to great distances. Arb.
VULGAR, adj. [vulgaire, Fr. vulgaris, Lat.]
 1. Plebeian; suited to the common people; practised among the common people. Men

VUL

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Mean; low; being of the common rate.
It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them. South.
Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground;
Yet by the fuddle you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Broome.

3. Publick; commonly bruited.
Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — —Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that. Shakespeare.
VULGAR. n. f. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.
I'll about;
Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shakespeare.
Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the afflicted vulgar, as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself. K. Charles.
The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigotted counsellors. Swift.
VULGARITY. n. f. [from vulgar.]
1. Meanness; state of the lowest people.
Although their condition may place them many spheres above the multitude; yet are they still within the line of vulgarity and demerocratical enemies to truth. Brown.
True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarities, if I say they are daily mocked into error by deifiers. Brown.
2. Particular instance or specimen of meanness.
Is the grand sophos of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and vulgarity of expression? Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
VULGARLY. adv. [from vulgar.] Commonly; in the ordinary manner; among the common people.
He was, which people much respect
In princes, and which pleases vulgarly,
Of goodly pers'nage, and of sweet aspect. Daniel.

I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth. Hooker.
The substance of those controversies whereunto we have begun to wade, be rather of outward things appertaining to the church, than of any thing wherein the being of the church consisteth. Hooker, b. iii.

WAD

W. Is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.
W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel, for u, v, u, u, u, u, the sound of u consonant is uniform.
To WAD. v. n. [A low, barbarous word.] To shake; to move from side to side.
If in your work you find it waddle; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up. Mason.
WAD. n. f. [peeb hay, Saxon.]
1. A bundle of straw thrust close together.
2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value. Woodward.
WADDING. n. f. [from wad, wad, Islandick] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.
To WAD. v. n. [wagghelen, Dutch, to waggle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddle.] To shake, in walking from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.
She could have run and waddled all about. Shakespeare.
The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down like big-bellied women. Spectator, N° 127.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door fill,
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in the neighbor's pool.
A dabchick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.
Dulness, of business the directing soul,
To human heads like bias to the bowl;
Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true,
Obliquely waddling to the mark in view. Pope.
To WADE. v. n. [from wadam, Lat. pronounced wadam.]
1. To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.
We'll wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood. Shakespeare.

WAF

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade. Fairy Queen, b. i.
I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.
'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men. Deacy of Piety.
The dame
Now try'd the stairs, and wading through the night,
Search'd all the deep recess, and issu'd into light. Dryden.
The wrathful God then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way,
Half-sing'd, half-still'd. Dryden.
Simonides, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth, and that he lost himself in the thought. Addison.
WAFER. n. f. [wafel, Dutch.]
1. A thin cake.
Wife, make us a dinner; spare flesh, neither corn;
Make wafers and cakes, for our sheepe must be shorn. Tusser.
Poor Sancho they persuaded that he enjoyed a great dominion, and then gave him nothing to subsist upon but wafers and marmalade. Pope.
2. The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.
That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin wafer; yet so, that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Hall.
3. Paste made to close letters.
To WAF. v. a. [probably from wafel.]
1. To carry through the air, or on the water.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waf'd o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.
Our high admiral
Shall waf't them over with our royal fleet. Shakespeare.
Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to waf't up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Nor dares his transport-vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves:
A hundred years they wander on the shore;
At length, their penance done, are waf'd o'er. Dryden.
Lend to this wretch your hand, and waf't him o'er
To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore. Dryden.
From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was waf'd and carried away. Ray.
They before waf'd over their troops into Sicily in open vessels. Arbutnot on Coins.
In vain you tell your parting lover,
You with fair winds may waf't him over:
Alas! what winds can happy prove,
That bear me far from what I love? Prior.
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waf't a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.
2. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.
To WAF. v. n. To float.
It waf'd nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but surmisd, was true. Dryden.
Those trumpets his triumphant entry tell,
And now the shouts waf't near the citadel. Dryden.
WAF. n. f. [from the verb.]

WAG. n. f. [Daxian, Saxon; to cheat.] Any one ludicrously mischievous; a merry droll.

Cupid the wag, that lately conquer'd had Wife counsellors, stout captains pliant;
And ty'd them fast to lead his triumphs bad,
Glutted with them, now plays with meanness things. Sidney.

Was not my lord the verier wag o' th' two? Shakespeare.

We wink at wags, when they offend,
And spare the boy, in hopes the man may mend. Dryden.

A counsellor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about a finger all the while he was speaking: the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE. n. f. the plural wages is now only used. [wagen, or wagen, German; gages, Fr.]

1. Pay given for service.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their virtue, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

The last petition is for my men; they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me;
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me. Shakespeare.

By Tom Thumb, a fairy page;
He sent it, and doth him engage,
By promise of a mighty wage,
To secretly carry. Dryden's Nymphid.

The thing itself is not only our duty, but our glory: and he who hath done this work, has, in the very work, partly received his wages. South.

2. Gage; pledge. Ainsworth.

To WAGE. v. a. [The origination of this word, which is now only used in the phrase to wage war, is not easily discovered: waegen, in German, is to attempt any thing dangerous.]

1. To attempt; to venture.

We must not think the Turk is so unskillful,
Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shakespeare.

2. To make; to carry on. Applied to war.

Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd;
No; rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enemy o' th' air,
To be a comrade with the wolf. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Your reputation wages war with the enemies of your royal family, even within their trenches. Dryden.

He ponder'd, which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit. Dryden.

 To give thee all; and in his waning age
 Set foot under thy table. Shakespeare.
 In these confines sily have I lurk'd,
 To watch the waning of mine enemies. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
 Nothing more jealous than a favourite, towards the waning time, and suspect of satiety.
 I'm waning in his favour, yet I love him.
 You saw but sorrow in its waning form,
 A working sea remaining from a storm;
 When the now weary waves roll o'er the deep,
 And faintly murmur, ere they fall asleep. Dryden.
 Land and trade ever will wax and wane together. Child.
 Her waning form no longer shall incite
 Envy in woman, or desire in man. Rew's Jane Shore.
WANE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Decrease of the moon.
 The sowing at the wane of the moon, is thought to make the corn found.
 Young cattle, that are brought forth in the full of the moon, are stronger and larger than those that are brought forth in the wane. Bacon.
 This is fair Diana's case;
 For all astrologers maintain,
 Each night a bit drops off her face,
 When mortals say she's in her wane. Swift.
 2. Decline; diminution; declension.
 You're cast upon an age, in which the church is in its wane. South.
WANNED. adj. [from wan.] Turned pale and faint coloured.
 Is it not monstrous that this player here,
 But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
 Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
 That, from his working, all his visage wann'd. Shakespeare.
WANNES. n. f. [from wan.] Paleness; languor.
TO WANT. v. a. [wana, Saxon.]
 1. To be without something fit or necessary.

 Nor can this be,
 But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
 Obedience to the law. Milton.
 3. To fall short of; not to contain.
 Nor think, though men were none,
 That heav'n wou'd want spectators, God want praise. Mit.
 4. To be without; not to have.
 By descending from the thrones above,
 Those happy places, thou hast design'd a while
 To want, and honour these. Milton's Par. Lost.
 How loth I am to have recourse to rites
 So full of horror, that I once rejoice
 I want the use of fight.
 The unhappy never want enemies. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
 5. To need; to have need of; to lack.
 It hath caus'd a great irregularity in our calendar, and wants to be reformed, and the equinox to be rightly computed.
 God, who sees all things intuitively, does not want helps; he neither stands in need of logic, nor uses it. Baker.
 6. To wish for; to long for.
 Down I come, like glitt'ring Phaeton,
 Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakespeare.
 The sylfuns to their shades retire,
 Those very shades and streams new shades and streams require,
 And want a cooling breeze of wind to fan the raging fire. Dry.
 What wants my son? for know
 My son thou art, and I must call thee so. Addison's Ovid.
 Men who want to get a woman into their power, seldom scruple the means. Clarissa.
TO WANT. v. n.
 1. To be wanted; to be improperly absent; not to be in sufficient quantity.
 Nor did there want corn or freeze. Milton.
 Finds wealth where 'tis, bestows it where it wants;
 Cities in deserts, woods in cities plant. Denham.
 We have the means in our hands, and nothing but the application of them is wanting. Addison.
 As in bodies, thus in souls, we find
 What wants in blood and spirits, swell'd with wind. Pope.
 The design, the disposition, the manners, and the thoughts, are all before it; where any of those are wanting, or imperfect, so much wants in the imitation of human life. Dryden.
 2. To fail; to be deficient.
 Not shall I to the work thou enterprisest
 Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid. Milton.
 Though

W A N

Though England is not wanting in a learned nobility, yet unhappy circumstances have confin'd me to a narrow choice. Dryden's Dedication to Lord Clifford.
 Whatever fortune, good or bad betide,
 No time shall find me wanting to my truth. Dryden.
 Religion will never be without enemies, nor those enemies be wanting in endeavours to expose it to the contempt of mankind. Rogers's Sermons.
 Several are against his severe usage of you, and would be glad of an occasion to convince the rest of their error, if you will not be wanting to yourself. Swift.
 3. To be miss'd; to be not had.
 Twelve, wanting one, he flew,
 My brethren: I alone surviv'd. Dryden.
 Granivorous animals have a long colon and cecum, which in carnivorous are wanting. Arbutnot on Aliments.
WANT. n. f.

 2. Deficiency.
 This proceeded not from any want of knowledge, but of judgment. Dryden.
 One objection to Civita Vecchia, is, that the air is not wholesome: this proceeds from want of inhabitants. Addison.
 The blood flows through the vessels, by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth fat, the disease is the cause of itself. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 3. The state of not having.
 You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.
 4. Poverty; penury; indigence.
 Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want. Swift.
 5. [want, Saxon.] A mole.
WANTON. n. f. [I his word is derived by Minshaw from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Juvius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]
 1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.
 Thou art forward by nature, enemy to peace, Lascivious, wanton; more than well become A man of thy profession. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 Entic'd to do him wanton rites. Milton.
 2. Licentious; dissolute.
 My piteous joys,
 Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
 In drops of sorrow. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
 Men grown wanton by prosperity,
 Study'd new arts of luxury and ease. Roscommon.
 3. Frolicsome; gay; sportive; airy.
 As flies to wanton boys, we are to th' gods:
 They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
 Note a wild and wanton herd,
 Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.
 Time drives the flocks from field to fold;
 The flow'rs do fade, and wanton fields
 To wayward winter reckoning yields.
 How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
 As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
 Y' appear, in every thing may bring my ruin. Shakespeare.
 4. Loose; unrestrained.
 How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise! Addison.
 5. Quick, and irregular of motion.
 6. Luxuriant; superfluous.
 What we by day lop overgrown,
 One night or two, with wanton growth derides,
 Tending to wild.
 Women richly gay in gems and wanton drefs.
 Tending to wild. Milton.
 7. Not regular; turned fortuitously.
 The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
 For want of tread are undistinguishable. Milton.
WANTON. n. f.
 1. A lascivious person; a strumpet; a whoremonger.
 An old wanton will be doating upon women, when he can scarce see without spectacles. South's Sermons.
 To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
 And to suppose her chaste. Shakespeare, Othello.
 2. A trifier; an insignificant flatterer.
 Shall a beardless boy,
 A cocker'd, fliken wanton brave your fields,
 Mocking the air with colours idly spread,
 And find no check? Shakespeare's K. John.
 Pals with your best violence;
 I am afraid you make a wanton of me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

W A R

3. A word of slight endearment.
 Peace, my wantons; he will do,
 More than you can aim unto. B. Johnson.
TO WANTON. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play lasciviously.
 He from his guards and midnight tent,
 Disguis'd o'er hills and valleys went,
 To wanton with the sprightly dame,
 And in his pleasure lost his fame. Prior.
 2. To revel; to play.
 Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;
 Speak things of him might charm the ears.
 Nature here
 Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will Her virgin fancies. Milton.
 O ye mules! deign your blest retreat,
 Where Horace wantons at your spring,
 And Pindar sweeps a bolder string. Fenton.
 3. To move nimbly, and irregularly.
WANTONLY. adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicsome-ly; gayly; sportively; carelessly.
 Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
 Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:
 But do not wantonly my passion move,
 I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.
WANTONNESS. n. f. [from wanton.]
 1. Lasciviousness; lechery.
 The spirit of wantonness is fear'd out of him. Shakespeare.
 Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars. South.
 2. Sportiveness; frolic; humour.
 When I was in France,
 Young would be as sad as night,
 Only for wantonness. Shakespeare, K. John.
 Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;
 Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:
 As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn,
 A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn. Pope.
 3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.
 The tumults threatened to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness. K. Charles.
 Till wantonness and pride
 Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milton.
WANTWIT. n. f. [want and wit.] A fool; an idiot.
 Such a wantwit sadness makes of me,
 That I have much ado to know myself. Shakespeare.
WANTY. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse.
 A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
 With line to fetch litter. Tusser.
WAPED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to wape, to flock, or deject, is found in Spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery.
 His makes the waped widow wed again. Shakespeare.
WAPENTAKE. n. f. [from wapen, Saxon, and take, wapentakium, wapentogium, low Latin.]
Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as upon a meeting for that purpose, they touch'd each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Cowley.
 Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake, so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think, that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs. Spenser.
WAR. n. f. [warre, old Dutch; guerre, Fr.]
War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors. Raleigh.
 On, you noblest English,
 Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof. Shakespeare.
 After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large. Bacon.
 I saw the figure and armour of him, that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers. Addison.
 2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.
 The god of love inhabits there,
 With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;
 His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.
 3. Forces; army. Poetically.
 On th' embattled ranks the waves return,
 And overwhelm the war. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 4. The profession of arms.

Thine

WAR

Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. Wisdom.
5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.
Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
To WAR, v. n. [from the noun] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.
Was this a face,
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shakespeare.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shakespeare.
Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—
—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your own soul's loss blind,
That you will war with God, by murdering me? Shakespeare.
He teacheth my hands to war. 2 Sam. xxii.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Tim. i. 18.
He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wife to war upon the French. Bacon's Hen. VII.
We seem ambitious God's whole work 't undo;
With new diftates on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Dante.
His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Thebes. Dryden.
To the island of Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, nations warring with one another reformed with their goods,
and traded as in a neutral country. Arbutnot on Coins.
To WAR, v. a. To make war upon. A word not any longer used.
And them long time before great Nimrod was,
That first the world with sword and fire warred. Spenser.
To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel's Civ. War.
To WARBLE, v. a. [warben, old Teutonic; wervelen, German; to twirl, or turn round.]
1. To quaver any sound.
2. To quaver.
Follow me as I sing,
And touch the warbled string. Milton.
3. To utter musically.
She can thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invok'd with warbled song. Milton.
To WARBLE, v. n.
1. To be quavered.
Such strains ne'er warble in the linnets' throat. Gay.
2. To be uttered melodiously.
A plain song, plain-singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.
There birds resort, and in their kind, thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays. Wotton.
3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things sim'l'd. Milton.
She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note, Dryden.
A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attempt'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance,
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.
WARBLER, n. s. [from warble.] A singer; a songster.
Hark! on every bough,
In lulling strains the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.
WARD, A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way;
from peano, Saxon
Before she could come to the arbour, she saw walking from her-ward, a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.
To WARD, v. a. [peapian, Saxon; waren, Dutch; garder, French.]
1. To guard; to watch.
He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whole gates he found fast shut, no living sight
To ward the fame, nor answer comers' call. Fairy Queen.
2. To defend; to protect.
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakespeare.
3. To fence off; to obstruct, or turn aside any thing mischievous.
Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or thru her blows he tries.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

WAR

Toxens amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Or to revenge, or ward the coming blow,
Stood doubting; and while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.
The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addison.
The provision of bread for food; clothing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first look'd after. Wood.
It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
To WARD, v. n.
1. To be vigilant; to keep guard.
2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.
So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back. Sidney, &c.
Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear. Dryden.
WARD, n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Watch; act of guarding.
Still when he slept, he kept both watch and ward. Spenser.
Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd;
And dire Tiphoeus there keeps the ward. Dryden.
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the fowls that pass the downward way. Dryden.
2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.
By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.
Th' affixed castles ward
Their steadfast froids did mightily maintain. Spenser.
3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.
Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shakespeare, Temp.
Now, by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this, I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand, his front to guard. Dryden.
4. Fortrefs; strong hold.
She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
5. [Ward, law Lat.] District of a town.
Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.
6. Custody; confinement.
That wretched creature being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hoster.
Stopt there was his too vehement speech with speed,
And he sent clofe to ward from where he stood. Daniel.
7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.
In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and ev'ry bolt and bar. Milton.
As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Moxon's Mach. Exerc.
The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward,
by the same wisdom. Greav's Cosmology.
8. One in the hands of a guardian.
The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.
You know our father's ward,
The fair Monimia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Ottway.
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed, before she was my ward. Dryden.
When stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We last the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
Titles of honour and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Spenser.
9. The state of a child under a guardian.
I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.
Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward. Bacon.
10. Guardianship; right over orphans.
It is also inconvenient in Ireland, that the ward and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.
WARDEN, n. s. [warden, Dutch.]
1. A keeper; a guardian.
2. A head officer.
The warden of apothecaries hall. Garth.

WAR

3. Warden of the cinque ports.
A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of these havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowel.
4. [Pyram volunum, Lat. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.
Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Cullumian, Syrian pears, and warden's great. May's Virg.
Ox-check when hot, and warden's bak'd some cry. King.
WARDER, n. s. [from ward.]
1. A keeper; a guard.
Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly drew
Those warden's strange, and all that else he met. Hubbard.
Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Though bladed corn be lodg'd and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders' heads. Shakespeare.
The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.
2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.
Sound trumpets, and set forward combatants.
—But stay, the king hath thrown his warden down. Shakespeare.
Then, then, when there was nothing could have fluid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shakespeare.
WARDMOT, n. s. [peano and more, or gemot, Saxon; ward- motus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London for the direction of their affairs.
WARDROBE, n. s. [garderobe, French; garderoba, low Lat.] A room where cloaths are kept.
The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Fairy Queen.
I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his ward-robe piece by piece
Until I meet the king. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Behold!
What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unsupported spouse. Dryden.
It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see toga's and tumicks, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors. Addison.
WARDSHIP, n. s. [from ward.]
1. Guardianship.
By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encreased, and the profits of wardship cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.
2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.
The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardship of tumults. King Charles.
WARE, The prerogative of ware, more frequently ware.
A certain man ware no cloaths. Luke viii. 27.
WARE, adj. [For this we commonly say aware.]
1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.
The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matth. xxiv. 50.
2. Cautious; wary.
What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to defy the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in Vizor fair. Fairy Queen.
Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton.
To WARE, v. n. To take heed of; to beware.
A shuffled, fullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.
WARE, n. s. [paan, Saxon; ware, Dutch; warda, Swedish.]
Commonly something to be fold.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakespeare.
If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell, that we would not buy it. Nehem. x. 31.
I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou falsest than thy ware. Ben. Johnson.
Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleveland.
He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Lake.

WAR

WAREFUL, adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.
WAREFULNESS, n. s. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete;
With pretence from Strephon her to guard, Sidney.
He met her full; but full of warefulness.
WAREHOUSE, n. s. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.
His understanding is only the warehouse of other mens lumber, I mean false and unconcluding reasonings rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.
She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouse than at present. Addison.
She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson's Autumn.
WARELESS, adj. [from ware.] Uncautious; unwary. Spens.
WARELY, adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.
They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warely keep. Fairy Queen.
WAREFARE, n. s. [war and fare.] Military service; military life.
In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause. Milton.
Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the war which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows. Dryden.
The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings. Atterbury's Sermons.
The scripture has directed us to refer these misadventures in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies. Rogers.
To WAREFARE, v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.
That was the only amulet in that credulous warfaring age to escape dangers in battles. Camden's R. mains.
WARFABLE, adj. [war and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.]
Military; fit for war.
The weary Britons, whose warfable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful ruth,
Were to those pagans made an open prey. Fairy Queen.
WARILY, adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.
The charge thereof unto a courteous spirit
Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend. Fairy Queen.
The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in. Hooker.
It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observ'ng what it commands; but especially what it forbids. South's Sermons.
They searched diligently and concluded warily. Spenser.
WARINESS, n. s. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought;
timorous scrupulousness.
For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness. Donne.
To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used. Spenser's Sermons.
The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection and silence. Addison's Freeholder.
Most men have so much of ill nature, or of wariness, as not to tooth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.
I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expected it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Atterbury.
WARKE, n. s. [Anciently used for work; whence butwork.]

 Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:
 The Moor will gage
 His utmost forces on his next assault,
 To win a queen and kingdom. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
 4. Busy in action.
 I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
 Death all at once would be a nobler end;
 Fate is unkind; methinks a general
 Should warm, and at the head of armies fall. Dryden.
 5. Fanciful; enthusiastick.
 If there be a fober and a wife man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.
TO WARN. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.
 It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isa. xiv. 15.

 What do'st thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
 And tooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shakespeare's Othello.
 Our first parents had been warn'd
 His mortal sin. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen; so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear yet you shall not hear. South.
 Tuturna warns the Daunian chief,
 Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.
 If we consider the mistakes in mens disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warn'd of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of mens study. Locke.
 The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
 The sad examples which he ought to shun Describ'd.
 When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
 Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
 Perhaps he seem'd above the critic's law,
 And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.
 2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.
 Cornelius was warn'd from God by an holy angel to send for thee. Acts x. 22.

 3. To notify previously good or bad.
 He wonders to what end you have assembled
 Such troops of citizens to come to him,
 His grace not being warn'd thereof before. Shakespeare's Othello.
 He charg'd the soldiers with preventing care,
 Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,
 Warn'd of the ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war.
 Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,
 Which like a warning-piepe must be shot off,
 To fright the rest from crimes. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
WARNING. n. f. [from warn.]
 1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.
 I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night. Ps.
 He groaning from the bottom of his breast,
 This warning in these mournful words express'd. Dryden.

 This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible. Norris.
 3. To turn.
 The potent rod
 Of Amram's son in Egypt's evil day
 Way'd round the coasts, up call'd a pitchy cloud
 Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
 That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night. Milton's Paradise Lost.
TO WARP. v. a.
 1. To contract; to shrink.
 2. To turn aside from the true direction.
 This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
 Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue. Dryden.
 Not foreign or domestick treachery
 Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryden.
 A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God. Locke.
 I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.
 Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
 Not grave through pride, or gay through folly;
 An equal mixture of good humour,
 And sensible soft melancholy. Swift.
 A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth. Watts.
 3. It is used by Shakespeare to express the effect of frost.
 Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
 Thou dost not bite so nigh
 As benefits forgot:
 Though thou the waters warp,
 Thy sting is not so sharp
 As friends remember'd not. Shakespeare's As you like it.
TO WARRANT. v. n. [garantir, French.]
 1. To support or maintain; to attest.
 She needed not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warrant'd by the sacred name of father. Sidney.

A watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls, to testify their vigilancy. Saunders.
WATER, n. f. [from Latin, Aqua.] Shak. Hamlet.
1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all flavour or taste; it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr.
Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces: their sphericity keeps them by from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their frictions in sliding over one another, is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the in-compressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

watered silk, does the like. Locke.
To WATER, v. n. [from water.] Locke.
1. To shed moisture.
I stain'd this napkin with the blood;
That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point Made issue from the bosom of the boy; and when
And if thine eyes can water for his death, Shak. Henry VI.
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal. Shak. Henry VI.
Mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine, Began to water. Shak. Julius Cæsar.
The tickling of the nostrils within, doth draw the moisture to the nostrils, and to the eyes by consent; for they also will water. Bacon's Natural History.
How troublesome is the least mote, or dust falling into the eye! and how quickly does it weep, and water upon the least grievance! South's Sermons.
2. To get or take in water; to be used in supplying water.
He set the rods he had pulled before the flocks in the gutters in the watering troughs. Gen. xxx. 38.

siers and small ordnance, into the lake near unto the camp, to keep the Christians from watering there. Knolles.
3. The mouth WATERS. The man longs; there is a vehement desire. From dogs who drop their slaver when they see meat which they cannot get.
Cardinal Wolsey's teeth watering at the bishoprick of Winchester, sent one unto bishop Fox, who had advanced him, for to move him to resign the bishoprick, because extreme age had made him blind; which motion Fox did take in fo ill part, that he willed the messenger to tell the cardinal, that, although now I am blind, I have espied his malicious unthankfulness.
These reasons made his mouth to water,
With amorous longings to be at her. Hudibras.
I hope who contend for 4 per cent. have set men's mouths
a-watering for money at that rate. Locke.
WATERCOLOURS, n. f. [from water and colour.]
Painters make colours into a soft consistence with water or oil; those they call watercolours, and these they term oilcolours.
Lest should I dawb it o'er with transitory praise,
And watercolours of these days:
These days! where e'en th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.

come to be assured that there is such a being as God? Tillotson.
A child his mother so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world. Locke.
It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things, than those five he has given to man. Locke.
16. Method; scheme of management.
He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being to continually followed by the best, and every way ableft of that region. Sidney, b. ii.
Will not my yielded crown redeem my breath?
Still am I fear'd? is there no way but death? Daniel.
As by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to himself in the way of flattery; so by calling good evil, he is misrepresented to others, in the way of slander. South's Sermons.
Now what impious ways my wishes took?
How they the monarch, and the man forsook? Prior.
The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to the time. Swift.

WAY

17. Private determination.
He was of an high mind, and loved his own will and his way,
as one that revered himself, and would reign indeed. Bacon.
If I had my way,
He had mew'd in flames at home, not i' th' senate;
I had sing'd his furs by this time. B. Johnson's Catiline.
18. Manner; mode.
She with a calm carelessness let every thing slide, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Sidney.

Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd,
Drove through his neck afloat; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the wesand's wound. Dryden.
The unerring steel descend'd while he spoke,
Pierc'd his wide mouth, and through his wesand broke. Dryden.
WEATHER. n. f. [peben, Saxon.]
1. State of air, respecting either cold or heat, wet or driness.
Who's there, besides foul weather?—One mended like the weather, most unquietly. Shakespeare's King Lear.
I am far better born than is the king;
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong. Shakespeare.
Men must content themselves to travel in all weathers, and through all difficulties. L'Estrange.
The sun
Foretells the change of weather in the skies,
Through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.
2. The change of the state of the air.
It is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle not in decay;
how much more to behold an ancient family, which have stood against the waves and weathers of time? Bacon.
3. Tempest; storm.
What gusts of weather from that gathering cloud,
My thoughts preface. Dryden's Virgil.
To WEATHER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To expose to the air.
He perch'd on some branch thereby,
To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.
Mustard-seed gather for being too ripe,
And weather it wel, yer ye give it a stripe. Tusser.
2. To pass with difficulty.
He weather'd tell Charibdis; but ere long,
The skies were darkened, and the tempests strong. Garth.
Could they weather and stand the shock of an eternal duration, and yet be at any time subject to a dissolution. Hale.
3. To WEATHER a point. To gain a point against the wind;
to accomplish against opposition.
We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weather'd our point; a stretch or two more will do the work. Addison.
4. To WEATHER out. To endure.
When we have pass'd these gloomy hours,
And weather'd out the storm that beats upon us. Addison.
WEATHERBEATEN. adj. Harassed and seasoned by hard weather.
They perceived an aged man and a young, both poorly arrayed, extremely weatherbeaten; the old man blind, the young man leading him. Sidney.
She enjoys sure peace for evermore,
As weatherbeaten ship arrived on happy shore. Fairy Queen.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weatherbeaten back. Shak. H. IV.
I hope when you know the worst, you will at once leap into the river, and swim through handomely, and not weatherbeaten with the divers blasts of irresolution, stand shivering upon the brink. Suckling.
A weatherbeaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.

WEA

- Dido received his weatherbeaten troops. Dryden's Virgil.
The old weatherbeaten soldier carries in his hand the Roman eagle. Addison.
WEATHERBOARD, or Weatherbow. n. f. In the sea language, that side of a ship that is to the windward. Diet.
WEATHERCOCK. n. f. [weather and cock.]
1. An artificial cock set on the top of a spire, which by turning shows the point from which the wind blows.
But alas! the sun keeps his light, though thy faith be darkened; the rocks stand still, though thou change like a weathercock. Sidney.
A kingfisher hanged by the bill, converting the breast to that point of the horizon from whence the wind doth blow, is a very strange introducing of natural weathercocks. Brown.
2. Any thing fickle and inconstant.
Where had you this pretty weathercock?—I cannot tell what his name is my husband had him of. Shakespeare.
He break my promise and abolve my vow!
The word which I have given shall stand like fate,
Not like the king's that weathercock of state. Dryden.
WEATHERDRIVEN. part. Forced by storms or contrary winds.
Philip, during his voyage towards Spain, was weather-driven into Weymouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
WEATHERGAUGE. n. f. [weather and gauge.] Any thing that shews the weather.
To vere and tack, and steer a cause,
Against the weathergauge of laws. Hudibras.
WEATHERGLASS. n. f. [weather and glass.] A barometer.
As in some weatherglass my love I hold,
Which falls or rises with the heat or cold,
I will be constant yet. Dryden.
John's temper depended very much upon the air; his spirits rose and fell with the weatherglass. Arbutnot.
We shall hardly wish for a perpetual equinox to have the charges of weatherglasses; for the two equinoxes of our year are the most windy and tempestuous. Bentley's Sermons.
WEATHERSPEY. n. f. [weather and spey.] A star-gazer; an astrologer; one that foretells the weather.
And sooner may a gulling weather-spey,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Denne.
WEATHERWISE. adj. [weather and wise.] Skillful in foretelling the weather.
WEATHERWISER. n. f. [weather and wiser, Dutch; to show.]
Any thing that foretells the weather.
Most vegetables expand their flowers and down in warm sun shiny weather, and again close them toward the evening, or in rain, as is in the flowers of pimpernel, the opening and shutting of which are the countryman's weatherwisser. Derham's Physico-Theology.
To WEAVE. v. a. Preterite wove, woven, part. pass. woven, woven; [weyan, Saxon; woven, Dutch.]
1. To form by texture; to form by inserting one part of the materials within another.
Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to intrap the hearts of men, Faster than gnats in cobwebs. Shakespeare.
The women wove hangings for the grove. 2 Kings xxiii. 7.
White seem'd her robes, yet wove to they were,
As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dryden.
These purple veils were wove'd by Dardan dames. Dryden.
Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has wove'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress:
And Venus shall the texture bles. Prior.
2. To unite by intermixture.
When religion was wove into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, mens thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.
3. To interpose; to insert.
The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
This wove itself perforce into my business. Shakespeare.
To WEAVE. v. n. To work with a loom.
WEAVER. n. f. [from weave.] One who makes threads into cloth.
Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all not able to maintain,
The many to them longing, have put off
The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers. Shak. Hen. VIII.
My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Feb. vii. 6.
The

WED

- The weaver may cast religion upon what loom he please. How.
Her flag aloft spreads ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver charm'd with what his loom design'd,
Goes on to see, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
WEAVERFISH. n. f. [araneus piscis, Latin.] A fish. Addison.
WEB. n. f. [pebba, Saxon.]
1. Texture; any thing woven.
Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her woovers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she did again unweave. Spenser.
Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part. Davies.
By day the web and loom,
And homely household talk shall be her doom. Dryden.
The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bles the faced clue and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours. Prior.
2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.
The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold, approv'd by touch. Fairf.
3. A kind of dufky film that hinders the sight; suffusion.
This is the foul flibbertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakespeare.
WEBBED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.
Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are webbed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham's Physico-Theology.
WEBFOOTED. adj. [web and foot.] Palmipedous; having films between the toes.
Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor far to enter the water. Ray on the Creation.
WEBSTER. n. f. [webstere, Saxon; a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Obsolete.
After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as Taylor, Webster, Wheeler. Camden.
To WED. v. a. [peyan, Saxon.]
1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.
If one by one we wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; the you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, so inflame my senses.
Cloy, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dullness of some son of earth. Pope.
2. To join in marriage.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakespeare.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that begun in the garden; and our understandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.
3. To unite for ever.
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakespeare's Rom. and Jul.
4. To take for ever.
Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedding the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.
They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.
5. To unite by love or fondness.
Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to with there were no God. Tillotson's Sermons.
To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.
When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakespeare.
To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed
You were ordain'd. Suckling.
Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.
WEDDING. n. f. [from wed.] Marriage; nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.
Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakespeare.
I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakespeare.
Let her beauty be her wedding dower;
For me and my possessions the effects not. Shakespeare.
When my son was entered into his wedding-chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdr. x. 1.
These three country bills agree, that each wedding produces four children. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

WEE

- His friends were invited to come and make merry with him;
and this was to be the wedding-feast. L'Estrange.
If she affirmed herself to be a virgin, she must on her wedding-day, and in her wedding cloaths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.
A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-cloaths. Spectator.
WEDGE. n. f. [wegge, Danish; wegge, Dutch.]
1. A body, which having a sharp edge, continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.
A barbarous troop of clownish fone,
The honour of these noble bows down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.
The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
He left his wedge within the cloven oak
To whet their courage. Dryden's Æneid.
The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
2. A mass of metal.
As sparks from the anvil used to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Fa. Qu.
When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Josh. vii.
3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike multitudes they appear,
In rhombs and wedges and half-moons and wings. Milton.
To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fasten with wedges; to straiten with wedges; to cleave with wedges; to stop; to obstruct.
My heart,
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain,
Left Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakespeare.
Where have you been broiling?
—Among the crowd i' the abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakespeare.
Part
In common, rang'd in figure wedge their way;
Intelligent of seasons. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sergeffus in the centaur, soon he pass'd,
Wedg'd in the rocky shoals and sticking fast. Dryden.
Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Phillips.
What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entomb'd and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn. Bentley's Sermons.
WEDLOCK. n. f. [wed and lac, Sax. marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.
She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.
Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:
And if she did play false, the fault was her's. Shakespeare.
Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse. Cleaveland.
He his happiest choice too late,
Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton's Paradise Lost.
May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have?
One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free:
And uncontrol'd to give account to none. Dryden.
A man determin'd about the fiftieth year of his age to enter upon wedlock. Addison.
WEDNESDAY. n. f. [proben-day, Saxon; adensday, Swedish; wensday, Dutch; wensday, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.
Where is the honour of him that died on wednesday. Shak.
WEE. adj. [A Saxon word of the same root with weing, Dutch;
wenig, German.] Little; small: whence the word weasle or wesol is used for little; as a wesol face. In Scotland it denotes small or little; as wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit, a little bit.
Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's pa-ring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face with a little yellow beard. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
WEECHELM. n. f. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.
A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.
WEED. n. f. [peob, Saxon, tares.]
1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition; which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.
He

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.
Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While fests, like locusts, did destroy the seeds. Denham.
Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Mora.
When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed,
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.
2. [Weeda, Saxon; weeda, Dutch.] A garment; cloaths; habit; drefs. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning drefs of a widow. Sidney.
My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.
Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments. Hooker.
They meet upon the way
An aged fire, in long black weeds yclad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his book he hanging had. Fairy Queen.
Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.
The snake throws her enamelled skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakespeare.
Throng of knights and barons hold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies. Milton.
Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.
To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To rid of noxious plants.
When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.
Your feedings having flood 'till June, bestow a weeding or a slight howing upon them. Mortimer.
2. To take away noxious plants.
Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.
He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumiz'd it from that most dangerous confederacy.
Howel's Pseal Forest.
Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Decay of Piety.
4. To root out vice.
Wife fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Sham's Schoolmaster.
One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Locke.
WEEDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.
A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakespeare, Richard III.
WEEDHOOK. n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.
In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.
WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.
So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Donne.
A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;
'Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below. Dryden.
WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]
1. Consisting of weeds.
There on the pendant boughs, her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
2. Abounding with weeds.
Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden's En.
If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.
WEEK. n. f. [from weke, Saxon; weke, Dutch; wecka, Swedish.]
The space of seven days.
Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Gen. xxix.
WEEKDAY. n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.
One solid dish his weekday meal affords.
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.
WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.
So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryden.
Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.
WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.
These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Asse.
WEEK. n. f. [from weke, Saxon.]
1. A whirlpool.
2. A twiggan snare or trap for fish, [perhaps from weigan.]
To WEEN. v. n. [from wean, Saxon; weanen, Dutch.] To think;
to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.
Ah lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wondrous great. Spenser.
So well it her becoms, that ye would ween
Some angel had been. Spenser's Epithalamium.
When weaning to return, whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Further from end then, when they nearest ween. Fa. Queen.
Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levy'd an army, weaning to redeem
And reinstate me in the diadem. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Ween you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your master,
Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
They wean'd
That self-same day, by fight or by surprise,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envy of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.
To WEEN. v. n. preter. and part. pass. except, weened. [Saxon.]
1. To show sorrow by tears.
In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping, Shak.
I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakespeare.
The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.
Deutr. xxxiv. 8.
Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.
Away, with women weep, and leave me here,
Fix'd, like a man, to die without a tear,
Or save, or slay us both. Dryden.
A corps it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, how'er, she made the case her own;
Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger weep. Dryden.
When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artaba-nus improv'd his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Waller's Preparation for Death.
This lovely weeping fair cannot be dearer to thee,
Than thou art to thy faithful Scordil. Rare.
2. To shed tears from any passion.
Then thou art for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among. Shakespeare, King Lear.
3. To lament; to complain.
They weep unto me, saying, give us flesh that we may eat. Nam.
To WEEP. v. a.
1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.
If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. Shakespeare.
Nor was I near to close his dying eyes.
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryden.
We wand'ring go
Through dreary walds, and weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. To shed moisture.
Thus was this place
A happy rural seat of various view,
Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm. Milb.
Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms command'd which those trees adorn. Pope.
3. To abound with wet.
Key-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds. Mortimer.
WEEP. n. f. [from weep.]
1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.
If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women

men and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou should'st; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.
Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes. Dryden.
2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.
WEIRISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and watery: here it seems to mean sour; furly.
A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weirish and crabbed, but fair and comely. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
To WEIR. v. n. preterite wet, or wete. [Saxon; weten,
Dutch.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge.
Obsolete.
Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, mought I of you this court'sy read,
To weir why on your shield, so goodly fear'd,
Bears ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weir
We stand upon perils. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
But well I weir thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.
WEIRLESS. adj. [from wet.] Unknowing. Spenser.
WEIRIL. n. f. [from wet.] A grub.
A worm called a weiril, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots; as parsnips and carrots. Bacon's Natural History.
Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weirils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.
WEIRIL. n. f. [See WEASEL.]
I suck melancholy out of a fong, as a weasel sucks eggs. Shak.
The corn-devouring weasel here abides,
And the wife ant. Dryden's Georg.
WEIR. The old preterite and part. pass. from To weir. Spens.
WEIR. n. f. [from weir, French; weir, to wander, Islandick;
weir, Latin.]
1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.
His horse, it is the herald's weir;
No, 'tis a mare. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
2. It is in Bacon for weir, a gentle blast.
The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest fort of smells are best in a weir afar off. Bac.
WEIR. n. f. [from weir, Saxon.] The wool of cloth.
WEIRAGE. n. f. [from weir.] Texture.
The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weirage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew's Museum.
To WEIGH. v. a. [from weagan, Saxon; weighen, Dutch.]
1. To examine by the balance.
Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved, so as not to be wet nor wasted, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous,
'till the river cometh to its height. Bacon's Natural History.
Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.
2. To be equivalent to in weight.
By the exsuction of the air out of a glass-vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.
3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakespeare.
They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Lech. xi.
4. To raise; to take up the anchor.
Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen galleys he had sunk. Kneller.
Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kifs, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.
5. To examine; to take up the anchor.
Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shak. H. IV.
The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.
His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.
You chose a retreat, and not 'till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher, with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.
All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.
The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions.
Addison's Spectator.
6. To WEIGH down. To overbalance.
Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel's Civ. War.
7. To WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.
The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.
In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.
Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison's Cato.
Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.
To WEIGH. v. n.
1. To have weight.
Exactly weighing and frangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.
2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.
This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.
A wife man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addis.
3. To raise the anchor.
When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dry.
4. To bear heavily; to press hard.
Can't thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.
In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.
WEIGHER. n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.
WEIGHT. n. f. [from weigh.] Quantity measured by the balance.
1. Quantity measured by the balance.
Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon's Natural History.
Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king:
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryd.
Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.
Just balances, just weights shall ye have. Lev. xix. 36.
Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money. Arbuthnot on Coins.
When the balance is intirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run intirely into one. Swift.
3. Ponderous mass.
A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the finews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth: as we see in horseraces, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon's Natural History.
Wolley, who from his own great store might have A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd:
Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou lie'st neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bp. Corbet.
All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains bury'd deep. Milton.
Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummetts to sink us to the deeper ruin. Government of the Tongue.

Then than the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness, and constancy will prove
The only pillars fit to bear
So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.
Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the center.
Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Wilkins.
The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd, Dryden.
Drove through his neck.
What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse fist blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling? Bentley.
5. Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.
Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shakespeare.
So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.
We must those, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.
The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people. L'Estrange.
Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.
6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy.
How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it. Locke.
To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper,
and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.
An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake. Addison.
See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight. Addison's Spectator.
The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words. Asterbury.
WEIGHTILY. adv. [from weighty.]
1. Heavily; ponderously.
2. Solidly; importantly.
Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously? Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
WEIGHTINESS. n. s. [from weighty.]
1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.
2. Solidity; force.
I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires. Locke.
3. Importance.
The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel. Hayward.
WEIGHTLESS. adj. [from weight.]
1. Light; having no gravity.
How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Can't thou the wisdom of his works declare? Sandys.
2. Not possible to be weighed. Improper.
It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above. Dryden.
WEIGHTY. adj. [from weight.]
1. Heavy; ponderous.
You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe;
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty, that it stops her wheel. Dryden.
2. Important; momentous; efficacious.
I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
No fool Pythagoras was thought;
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his lifting scholars stand;
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;
Else, may-be, some odd-thinking youth,
Lest friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.
Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift.
3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.
If, after two days thine, Athens contains thee, Attend our weightier judgment. Shakespeare. Timon.
WE'LAWAY. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of weal away, that is, happiness is gone; so Junius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, wee on wee: from welaway, is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.
Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spenser.

Ah, welaway! most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous sight? Fairy Queen.
We'LAWAY, the while I was so fond, Spenser.
To leave the good that I had in hand, Spenser.
WE'LCOME. adj. [from venu, French; pilume, Saxon; sul- kum, Dutch.]
1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.
I serve you, madam. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Your graces are right welcome. Shakespeare. King Lear.
He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And with it should proceed; for, unto men Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome. B. Job.
Here let me earn my bread, Shakespeare. King Lear.
Till off invoked death. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.
He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome and valued every where. Lake.
2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.
Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon.
WE'LCOME. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.
Welcome, he said,
O long expected to my dear embrace. Dryden.
Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden.
WE'LCOME. n. s.
1. Salutation of a new comer.
Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.
Lectures opening his free arms, and weeping.
His welcome forth. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
2. Kind reception of a new comer.
I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcome, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Sidney.
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Madam, new years may well expect to find
We come from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty as themselves seem new. Waller.
Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and a welcome too. South's Sermon.
To WE'LCOME. v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.
I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Shakespeare. Richard II.
They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us. Bacon.
Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and with thee long. Milton.
To welcome home
His warlike brother, is Pithious come. Dryden.
The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the Spring. Dryden.
WE'LCOME to our House. n. s. An herb. Anjouath.
WE'LCOMENESS. n. s. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.
Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown elder, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcome, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period. Boyle.
WE'LCOMER. n. s. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.
Farewel, thou woful welcomer of glory. Shakespeare.
WELD, or WOULD. n. s. [from luteola, Latin.] Yellow weed, or dyers weed.
Its leaves are oblong and intire: it has an anomalous flower, consisting of many dissimilar leaves: the fruit is globular, hollow, and divided into three parts. The dyers use it for dying bright yellows and lemon colours; and this is by some supposed to be the plant used by the ancient Persians in painting their bodies. Miller.
To WELD. v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.
Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doubling into one another. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
WE'LDER. n. s. A term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To weld, to turn or manage: whence welder, welder.
Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives mile-rably. Swift.
WE'LFARE. n. s. [from well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.
If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Add.

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of craft that only looks out after our immediate interest and advantage. Addison's Spectator.
To WELK. v. a. [Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning; pelican, in Saxon, is to roll; welken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, welk or whilk is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convoluted body. Wilk is used for a small shell-fish.] To cloud; to obscure.
Now sad Winter welked hath the day,
And Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes haik. Spenser.
As gentle shepherd 'gins to welk in West,
When ruddy Phœbus do bite their hasty supper best. Fairy Queen.
The welked Phœbus 'gan avail
His weary wain. Spenser.
WE'KED. adj. Wrinkled; wreathed.
Methought his eyes
Were two full moons: he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and wad'd like the enridged sea. Shakespeare.
WE'KIN. n. s. [from pelican, to roll, or pelcen, clouds; Sax.]
1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.
Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And apt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen;
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Fa. Qu.
The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser's Pastoral.
Spir your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Amaze the welkin with your broken flaves. Shak. R. III.
With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milton.
Now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly, or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin flow doth bend. Milton.
Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.
2. WELKIN EYE, is, I suppose, blue eye; sky-coloured eye.
Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakespeare.
WELL. n. s. [from well, Saxon.]
1. A spring; a fountain; a source.
Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton.
As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Davies.
2. A deep narrow pit of water.
The muscles are so many well-buckets: when one of them ads and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.
3. The cavity in which flairs are placed.
Hollow newelled flairs are made about a square hollow newel: suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of flairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
To WELL. v. n. [from well, Saxon.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.
Therby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welled forth alway. Fa. Qu.
The bubbling wave did ever freshly well. Fairy Queen.
A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh, alas! Spenser.
Himself affixes to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that welled from out the wound. Dryden's Æn.
From his two springs,
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Damæa rolls his infant stream. Thomson's Summer.
To WELL. v. a. To pour any thing forth.
To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Fairy Queen.
WELL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]
1. Not sick; not unhappy.
Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakespeare. King Lear.
In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well. Shakespeare.
While thou art well, thou mayest do much good; but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do:

it is not very much nor very good: Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better; then from better they must rise to best. L'Estrange.
Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Wake's Preparation for Death.
2. Convenient; happy.
Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could get one to be his tenant. Carver.
Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters, and longest stays. Sprad's Sermons.
This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too, if it extended itself to common conversation. Locke.
It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Ad.
3. Being in favour.
He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the fourth. Dryden.
4. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.
I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well. Shakespeare.
Just thoughts, and modest expectations are easily satisfied.
If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Ciliter.
WELL. adv. [from well, Gothick; pell, Saxon; wel, Dutch; wel, Hollandick.]
1. Not ill; not unhappily.
Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.
2. Not ill; not wickedly.
My bargains, and well-won thrift he calls int'rest. Shak.
Thou one bad act with many deeds well done Mayst cover. Milton.
3. Skillfully; properly.
A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Wotton.
Beware and govern well thy appetite. Milton.
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well. Dryden.
What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.
4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.
Solymann commended them for a plot to well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Kneller.
The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.
Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.
5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.
The plain of Jordan was well watered every where. Genset.
We are well able to overcome it. Nim. xiii. 30.
The merchant adventurers being a strong company, and well underfet with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.
6. To a degree that gives pleasure.
I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work. Bacon.
7. With praise; favourably.
All the world speaks well of you. Pope.
8. Well is sometimes like the French bien, a term of concession.
The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.
To know
In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton.
9. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.
Well, let's away, and say how much is done. Shakespeare.
Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover. Swift.
10. As well as. Together with; not less than.
Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria. Arbutnot on Coins.
11. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.
Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue. Ecclesi. xxv. 8.
12. Well might. Nearly; almost.
I freed well nigh half th' angelick name. Milton.
13. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.
Antiochus understanding him not to be well affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety. 2 Mac. iv. 21.
There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Eth. xvi. 23.
Should a whole host at once discharge the bows,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe. Pope.
What

WEL

What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Shakef.
Well-appareld April on the heel
 Of limping winter treads. Shakef. Romeo and Juliet.
 The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
 And ere the sacrificing throng he join'd,
 Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.
 Such musick
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung,
 Whilst the Creator great
 His constellations set,
 And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton.
 Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.
 He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
 His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
 To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
 A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.
 Those opposed files,
 Which lately met in the intestine shock,
 And furious close of civil butchery,
 Shall now, in mutual well-becoming rank,
 March all one way. Shakef. Hen. IV.
 O'er the Elean plains, thy well-breath'd horse
 Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.
 More dismal than the loud dispirited roar
 Of brazen engine, that ceaseless storms
 The bastion of a well-built city. Philips.
 He conducted his course among the same well-chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.
 My son corrupts a well-derived nature
 With his inducement. Shakefpeare.
 If good accrue, 'tis conferr'd most commonly on the base and infamous; and only happening sometimes to well-deserving. Dryden.
 It grieves me he should desperately adventure the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney, b. ii.
 What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth! Locke.
 A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well-disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone
 she desired to be. Sidney, b. ii.
 The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things. South's Sermons.
 A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object, operating duly on a well-disposed organ. Locke.
 Amid the main, two mighty fleets engage;
 Adium furveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.
 The ways of well-doing are in number even as many, as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker, b. ii.
 The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.
 God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing, endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers's Sermons.
 As far the spear I throw,
 As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.
 Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her throne,
 But ev'ry eye was fixt on her alone. Pope.
 Such a doctrine in St. James's air,
 Shou'd chance to make the well-drest rabble stare. Pope.
 The desire of esteem, riches, or powers, makes men espouse
 the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.
 We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.
 Echenus sage, a venerable man!
 Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.
 Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser on Ireland.
 How sweet the products of a peaceful reign?
 The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain:
 The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast;
 A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.
 Turkish blood did his young hands imbrue.
 From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
 Against the Moors his well-fleth'd sword he draws. Dryden.
 Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
 Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.
 A rational foul can be no more discerned in a well-form'd, than ill-shaped infant. Locke.
 A well-form'd proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.
 Oh! that I'd dy'd before the well-fought wall!
 Had some distinguishing day renown'd my fall,
 All Greece had paid my solemn funerals. Pope.
 Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Atterbury.

 Let firm, well-hammer'd soles protect thy feet
 Through freezing snows. Gay's Trivia.
 The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-harnessed, and compass'd round with horsemen. ibid. iv. 7.
 Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen, were dressed in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well-intentioned persons as would betray their country. Addison.
 He, full of fraudulent arts,
 This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden.
 He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalander. Sidney.
 Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
 That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope.
 Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head,
 With opening streets, and shining structures spread,
 She past, delighted, with the well-known seats. Pope.
 From a confus'd well-manag'd store,
 You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
 A noble soul is better pleas'd with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-manner'd court-slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally terrible. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.
 Well-meaners think no harm; but for the rest,
 Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.
 By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers's Sermons.
 He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lie of the conquest of France. Arbutnot.
 A critic supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have fail'd in an expression; and can it be wonder'd at, if the poets seem resolv'd not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side despises a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope's Preface to his Works.
 Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon.
 Jarring int'rests of themselves create
 Th' according musick of a well-mix'd state. Pope.
 When the blast of winter blows,
 Into the naked wood he goes;
 And seeks the tusk'd boar to rear,
 With well-mouth'd hounds, and pointed spear. Dryden.
 The applause that other people's reason gives to virtuous and well-ordered actions, is the proper guide of children, till they grow able to judge for themselves. Locke.
 The fruits of unity, next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all, are towards those that are without the church; the other toward those that are within. Bacon.
 The exercise of the offices of charity is always well-pleasing to God, and honourable among men. Atterbury.
 My voice shall sound, as you do prompt mine ear;
 And I will stoop, and humble my intents
 To your well-practic'd wise directions. Shakef. Hen. VI.
 The well-proportion'd shape, and beauteous face,
 Shall never more be seen by mortal eyes. Dryden.
 'Twas not the hasty product of a day,
 But the well-ripen'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden.
 Procure those that are fresh gathered, strait, smooth, and well-rooted. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 If I should instruct them to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden.
 The eating of a well-season'd dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Locke.
 Instead of well-set hair, baldness. Jsa. iii. 24.
 Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-stricken in age. Genesis.
 Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like big-bellied women. Speccator, N. 127.
 We never see beautiful and well-tafted fruits from a tree
 choaked with thorns and briars. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 The well-tim'd oars
 With sounding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.
 Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
 As hard a science to the fair as great. Pope.
 Mean time we thank you for your well-took labour.
 Go to your rest. Shakef. Hamlet.
 Oh you are well-tun'd now; but I'll let down the pegs that make this musick. Shakef. Othello.
 Her well-tun'd neck he view'd,
 And on her shoulders her dishevel'd hair. Dryden.
 A well-weighed judicious poem, which at first gains no more upon the world than to be just received, infinuates itself by insensible degrees into the liking of the reader. Dryden.
 He rails
 On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,
 Which he calls interest. Shakef. Merch. of Venice.
 Each by turns the other's bound invade,
 As, in some well-wrought picture, light and shade. Pope.
 WELLADAY. interj. [This is a corruption of welaway. See WELAWAY.] Alas. O well-

 WELLBEING. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.
 Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
 For whose wellbeing
 So amply, and with hands so liberal,
 Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
 The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude:
 such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and well-being. South's Sermons.
 All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and well-being of the whole. L'Estrange.
 He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Speccator, N. 571.
 WELLBORN. n. f. Not meanly descended.
 One whole extraction from an ancient line,
 Gives hope again that wellborn men may shine. Waller.
 Heav'n, that wellborn souls inspires,
 Prompts me, through lifted frowns, and rising fires,
 To rush undaunted to defend the walls. Dryden.
 WELLBRED. adj. [well and bred.] Elegant of manners; polite.
 None have been with admiration read,
 But who, besides their learning, were wellbred. Roscom.
 Both the poets were wellbred and well-natur'd. Dryden.
 Wellbred spaniels civilly delight,
 In muzzling of the game they dare not bite. Pope.
 WELLNATURED. adj. [well and nature.] Good-natured;
 kind. Arbutnot.
 WELLTOBE. interj. A word of praise.
 Wellto be, thou good and faithful servant. Matt. xxv. 21.
 WELLFAVOUR'D. adj. [well and favour.] Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.
 His wife seems to be wellfavoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer. Shakefpeare.
 WELLMET. interj. [well and met.] A term of salutation.
 Once more to-day wellmet, dissembler'd lords;
 The king by me requests your presence straight. Shakef.
 On their life no grievous burthen lies,
 Who are wellnatur'd, temperate and wife:
 But an inhuman and ill-temper'd mind,
 Not any easy part in life can find. Denham.
 The manners of the poets were not unlike; both of them were well-bred, wellnatured, amorous, and libertine at least in their writings; it may be also in their lives. Dryden.
 Still with esteem no less convers'd than read;
 With wit wellnatur'd, and with books well-bred. Pope.
 WELLNIGH. adv. [well and nigh.] Almost.
 The fame so fore annoy'd has the knight,
 That wellnigh choaked with the deadly fink,
 His forces fail. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 My feet were almost gone: my steps had wellnigh slip'd. Pf.
 England was wellnigh ruined by the rebellion of the barons, and Ireland utterly neglected. Davies.
 Whoever shall read over St. Paul's enumeration of the duties incumbent upon him, might conclude, that wellnigh the whole of christianity is laid on the shoulders of charity alone. Sprat's Sermons.
 Notwithstanding a small diversity of positions, the whole aggregate of matter, as long as it retained the nature of a chaos, would retain wellnigh an uniform tenuity of texture. Bentley.
 WELLSPENT. adj. Passed with virtue.
 They are to lie down without any thing to support them in their age, but the conscience of a wellspent youth. L'Estrange.
 What a refreshment then will it be to look back upon a wellspent life? Calamy's Sermons.
 The constant tenour of their wellspent days,
 No less deserv'd a just return of praise. Pope.
 WELLSPRING. n. f. [well and spring, Saxon.] Fountain; source.
 The fountain and wellspring of impiety, is a resolved purpose of mind to reap in this world, what sensual profit or sensual pleasure forever the world yieldeth. Hooker.
 Understanding is a wellspring of life. Prov. xvi. 22.
 WELLWILLER. n. f. [well and willer.] One who means kindly.
 Disarming all his own countymen, that no man might shew himself a wellwiller of mine. Sidney, b. ii.
 There are fit occasions ministered for men to purchase to themselves wellwillers by the colour, under which they oftentimes prosecute quarrels of envy. Hooker.
 WELLWISH. n. f. [well and wish.] A wish of happiness.
 Let it not enter into the heart of any one that hath a well-wish for his friends or posterity, to think of a peace with France, till the Spanish monarchy be entirely torn from it. Add.
 WELLWISHER. n. f. [from wellwish.] One who wishes the good of another. Speccator, N. 127.

WEN

The actual traitor is guilty of perjury in the eye of the law; the secret wellwisher of the cause is so before the tribunal of conscience. Addison's Freeholder, N. 6.
 Betray not any of your wellwishers into the like inconveniences. Speccator, N. 271.
 No man is more your sincere wellwisher than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.
 WELT. n. f. A border; a guard; an edging.
 Little low hedges made round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well. Bacon.
 Certain sciolli, or smatterers, are busy in the skirts and outsides of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to recommend them. They may have some edging or trimming of a scholar, a welt, or so; but no more. B. Johnson.
 To WELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To sew any thing with a border.
 To WELTER. v. n. [pealtan, Saxon; welteren, Dutch; volu-tari, Lat.]
 1. To roll in water or mire.
 He must not float upon his watery bier
 Unweep'd, nor welter to the parching winds. Milton.
 The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
 He soon discerns; and wellring by his side
 The next himself. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood. Dryden.
 He sung Darius, great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fallen from his high estate,
 And wellring in his blood. Dryden's St. Cecilia.
 2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.
 If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter in filthiness like a swine, all learning, all goodness is soon forgotten. Afcham.
 WEMM. n. f. [wemm, Saxon.] A spot; a scar.
 Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme or scar still remaineth. Brewer's on Languages.
 WEN. n. f. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence, or protuberance.
 Warts are said to be destroy'd by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck.
 It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrescences. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protu-berances upon the face of the earth. More.
 The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens and other excrescences, which belong not to the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 A promontory wens with grisly grace,
 Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.
 WENCH. n. f. [pence, Saxon.]
 1. A young woman.
 What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me? Sidney, b. ii.
 Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-star'd wench!
 Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at court,
 This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
 And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl, Ev'n like thy chastity. Shakef. Othello.
 Thou wouldst periwade her to a worse offence
 Than that, whereof thou dost accuse her wench. Donne.
 2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.
 But the rude wench her answer'd nought at all. Spenser.
 Do not play in wench-like words with that Which is so serious. Shakef. Cymbeline.

 not. Locke.
Whether it be that the riches of these discoveries fall not into the pope's hands, or for some other reason, the prince of Farnese will keep this feat from being turned up, 'till one of his own family is in the chair. Addison on Italy.
WHETHER, pronoun. Which of two.
 Whether when they came, they fell at words
Whether of them should be the lord of lords, Hudibras's Tale.
Whether of them twain did the will of his father? Mat. xxi.
Whether is more beneficial, that we should have the same yearly quantity of heat distributed equally, or a greater share in Summer, and in Winter a less? Bentley.
 Let them take whether they will: if they deduce all animals from single pairs, even to make the second of a pair, is to write after a copy. Bentley.
WHETSTONE, n. f. [whet and stone.] Stone on which any thing is whetted, or rubbed to make it sharp.
 The minds of the afflicted do never think they have fully conceived the weight or measure of their own woe: they use their affection as a whetstone both to wit and memory. Hooker.
 What avail'd her resolution chafe,
 Whose foberest looks were whetstones to desire? Fairfax.
 Whom the whetstone sharp to eat,
 And cry, mistones are good meat. Bun. Johnson.
 Diligence is to the understanding as the whetstone to the razor; but the will is the hand, that must apply the one to the other. South.
 A whetstone is not an instrument to carve with; but it sharpens those that do. Shakespeare Illustrated.
WHETTER, n. f. [from whet.] One that whets or sharpens.
 Love and enmity are notable whetters and quickeners of the spirit of life in all animals. More.
WHEY, n. f. [wey, Saxon; wey, Dutch.]
 1. The thin or ferous part of milks, from which the oleose or gummy part is separated.
 I'll make you feed on curds and wey. Shakespeare.
 Milk is nothing but blood turned white, by being diluted with a greater quantity of serum or wey in the glandules of the breast. Harvey on Consumptions.
 2. It is used of any thing white and thin.
 Those linnen cheeks of thine
 Are counsellors to fear. What, soldiers wey face! Shakel.
WHEY-Y. } adj. [from wey.] Partaking of wey; refering WHEYISH. } bling wey.
 Those medicines, being opening and piercing, fortify the operation of the liver, in fending down the wey part of the blood to the reins. Bacon's Natural History.
 He that quaffs
 Such weyish liquors, oft with cholic pangs He'll rear. Philips.
WHICH, pron. [whic, Saxon; welk, Dutch.]
 1. The pronoun relative; relating to things.
 The apostles term it the pledge of our heavenly inheritance, sometimes the handfel or earnest of that which is to come.
 Do they not blaspheme that worthy name, by the which we are called? Hooker, p. v.
 In defructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant. Ja. ii. 7.
 To which their want of judging abilities, add also their want of opportunity to apply to such a serious consideration as may let them into the true goodness and evil of things, which are qualities which seldom display themselves to the first view.
South's Sermons.
 The queen of furies by their side is set,
 And matches from their mouths th' untamed met.
Which, if they touch, her hissing snakes the reins. Dryden.
 After the several earths, consider the parts of the surface of this globe which is barren, as sand and rocks. Locke.
 2. It formerly was used for why, and related likewise to persons:
 as in the first words of the Lord's prayer, which is
 The Almighty, which giveth wisdom to whomsoever it

W H V

pleaseth him, did, for the good of his church, stay those eager affections. Hosker.

Do you hear, fir, of a battle?
—Every one hears that,
Which can distinguish found. Shaksp. King Lear.

Had I been there, which am a fully woman,
The soldiers should have to's'd me on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act. Shaksp. II. VI.

3. The genitive of which, as well as of who, is whose; but whose, as derived from which, is scarcely used but in poetry.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste. Milton.

4. It is sometimes a demonstrative: as, take which you will.

What is the night?
—Almost at odds with morning, which is which. Shaksp.

5. It is sometimes an interrogative: as, which is the man.

Two fair twins,
The puzzled strangers which is which enquire. Tickel.

WHICHSOEVER. pron. [which and soever.] Whether one or the other.

Whichever of these he takes, and how often soever he doubles it, he finds that it is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

WHIFF. nf. [chwyth, Welsh.] A blast; a puff of wind.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword,
Th' unnerv'd father falls. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Who,
If some unflay't whiff betray the crime,
Invents a quarrel thinner. Dryden.

Three pipes after dinner he constantly smokes,
And feasons his puffs with impertinent jokes. Prior.

Nick pulled out a boatwain's whistle: upon the first whiff
the tradesman came jumping in. Arbutnot.

To WHIFFLE. v.n. [from whiff.] To move incontinently, as if driven by a puff of wind.

Nothing is more familiar than for a whiffing fop, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero. L. strange.

A person of a whiffing and unsteady turn of mind cannot keep close to a point of controversy, but wanders from it perpetually. Watts.

Was our reason given, to be thus puff'd about,
Like a dry leaf, an idle straw, a feather,
The sport of every whiffing blast that blows? Revue.

WHIFFLER. n.f. [from whiff.]

1. One that blows strongly.

The beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which, like a mighty whiffler fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way. Shak. Henry V.

2. One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff.

Our fine young ladies retain in their service a great number of supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whiffers, and commonly call shoeing-horns. Spectator.

Every whiffler in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution. Swift.

WHIG. n.f. [Drög, Saxon.]

1. Whey.

2. The name of a faction.

The fourteenth counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern part producing more than they need, those in the west come in the Summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and thence the whigs. Now in that year before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggamor's inroad; and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of disunion. Burnet.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter. Swift.

WHIGGISH. adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.

She'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topics from the tories draws. Swift.

WHIGGISM. n.f. [from whig.] The notions of a whig.

I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism. Swift.

WHIGGISH. adj. [whig, German; pple, Saxon.] Time; space of time.

W H I

W H I

And live in the vast regions of the air. Creach's Manilius.

W H I

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Creach.
I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.
How the car rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the circling sand ascends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's loft. Smith.
2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.
I though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not flow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison's Spectator.
WHIRLBAT. n. f. [whirl and bat.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.
At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now himself slain
by Pollux. L'Estrange.
The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run. Creach's Manil.
The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected, as Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.
The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Referv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden's Virgil.
WHIRLBONE. n. f. The patella. Ainsworth.
WHIRLIGIG. n. f. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.
He found that marbles taught him percussion, and whirligigs the axis in peritrochio. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
That since they gave things their beginnings,
And set this whirligig a spinning. Prior.
WHIRLPOOL. n. f. [whirlpool, Saxon.] A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its center; a vortex.
Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shak. King Lear.
In the fathomless profound
Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpools overthrown. Sandys.
This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment links you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Send forth, ye wife! send forth your lab'ring thought:
Let it return with empty notions fraught,
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.
In the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there conspicuous one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.
WHIRLWIND. n. f. [werbelwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.
In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shaksp. Hamlet.
With whirlwinds from beneath the tofs'd the ship,
And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden's Æn.
WHIRRING. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.
From the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.
WHISK. n. f. [wischen, to wipe, German.]
1. A small becom, or brush.
The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet, being long agitated with a whisk or spoon, loses its transparency. Boyle.
If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantle-tree, gather up the fragments. Swift.
2. A part of a woman's dress.
An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venice. Child of Trade.
To WHISK. v. a. [wischen, to wipe, German.]
1. To sweep with a small becom.
2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.
Cardan believ'd great states depend Upon the tip of th' bear's tail's end;
That as the whisk'd it towards the sun,
Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.
WHISKER. n. f. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the cheek unshaven; the mustachio.
A sacrifice to fall of flate,
Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.
Behold four kings in majesty rever'd,
With hoary whiskers and a forked beard.
A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.
To WHISPER. v. n. [wisperen, Dutch.] To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker.
He sometime with fearful countenance would desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

W H I

All that hate me whisper together against me. Pf. xli. 7.
In speech of man, the whispering or sussurrus, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound, and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing in whispering; but in speech you may. Bacon.
The King Accellis calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.
It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said.
He comes and whispers in his ear.
The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purle down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.
To WHISPER. v. a.
1. To address in a low voice.
When they talk of him they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shak. King John.
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break. Shaksp.
He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon's Natural History.
The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Taylor.
2. To utter in a low voice.
You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shaksp.
They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bent.
3. To prompt secretly.
Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shak. H. VIII.
WHISPER. n. f. [from the verb.] A low soft voice.
The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.
Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.
Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.
He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.
WHISPERER. n. f. [from whisper.]
1. One that speaks low.
2. A private talker.
Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.
WHIST. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakspere uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective.]
1. Are silent.
Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curt'sied when you have, and kiss,
The wild waves whist. Shakspere's Tempest.
2. Still; silent.
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.
3. Be still.
WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence.
The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.
Whist awhile
Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke, Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson's Autumn.
To WHISTLE. v. n. [whystlan, Saxon; sibilus, Latin.]
1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shaksp.
His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shakspere.
Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon's Natural History.
While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.
Should Bertran found his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
He whisper'd as he went for want of thought.
The ploughman leaves the talk of days,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.
2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.
3. To sound shrill.
Soft whispers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murr'ing floods. Dryden.
Rhætus

W H I

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves; 'till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the fight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.
When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?
The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.
To WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.
Whistle them backwards and forwards, 'till he is weary.
He chanced to miss his dog: we stood still 'till he had whistled him up. South's Sermons.
When simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands! Pope.
WHISTLE. n. f. [whystle, Saxon.]
1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.
My fire in caves constrains the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.
2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.
3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.
Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton's Angler.
4. A small wind instrument.
The masters and pilots were so astonish'd that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.
Behold,
Upon the heaped tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To founds confus'd. Shaksp. Henry V.
Small whistles, or shepherds oaten pipes, give a found, because of their extreme flenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon's Natural History.
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells the gingle'd, and the whistle blew. Pope.
5. The noise of winds.
6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.
Madam, here comes my lord.
—I have been worth the whistle. Shaksp. King Lear.
The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.
WHISTLER. n. f. [from whistle.] One who whistles.
The prize was a guinea to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.
WHIT. n. f. [white, a thing; aphte, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.
We love, and are no whit regarded.
The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven, Hooker.
Her sacred book with blood ywrit,
That none could read, except the did him teach;
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Fairy Queen.
Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies on Ireland.
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And the no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.
In account of ancient times it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.
It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison's Foeholder, N°. 48.
WHITE. adj. [hpere, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]
1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.
When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest;
but when it was equally, or almost equally distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton's Opticks.
Why round our coaches crowd the white-glov'd beaux?
Ulysses cut a piece from the chine of the white-tooth'd boar, round which there was much fat. Broom.
2. Having the colour of fear; pale.
My hand will
That multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. —
—My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart so white. Shaksp. Macbeth.
3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.
Welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

W H I

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron, sage, white-robed truth? Milton.
Let this auspicious morning be express'd
With a white stone, distinguish'd from the rest;
White as thy fame, and as thy honour clear,
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.
To faithful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.
Peace o'er the world her olive-wand extend,
And white-robd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.
4. Grey with age.
I call you fervile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd,
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakspere's K. Lear.
So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months and years Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shakspere.
5. Pure; unblemish'd.
Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unpotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.
WHITE. n. f.
1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.
A friend coming to visit me, I stopp'd him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance view'd them well, he answer'd, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differ'd. Newton's Opticks.
My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspere.
2. The mark at which an arrow is shot.
If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.
Remove him then, and all your plots fly sure Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.
3. The albuginous part of eggs.
I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
To apply to his bleeding face. Shakspere.
The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth, with alum. Wifeman's Surgery.
What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.
The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. The white part of the eye.
Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with his hands,
And turns up the white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shaksp.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye, doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up as a hillock, above its convexity. Ray.
To WHITE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. Mar. ix. 3.
Like unto whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matt. xxiii.
WHITELEAD. n. f.
White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a more white coal, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this fold at the colour shops, the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.
WHITELY. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.
A white y wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shaksp.
Now, governor, I see I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make those trees,
Who were by nature slaves. Southern's Orsonoko.

WHITE-

WHI

WHI'TE MEAT. n. f. [white and meat.] Food made of milk. Much fatness in whitemeat is ill for the stone. Tusser.
The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats. Spenser.
To WHI'TEN. v. a. [from white.] To make white. The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.
Flax, the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds. Temple.
Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian, N^o. 61.
Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r; Prior.
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore.
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skew'r to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. Pope.
To WHI'TEN. v. n. To grow white.
The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.
WHI'TENESS. n. f. [from white.] On whom makes anything white.
1. The state of being white; freedom from colour. This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever fit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney, b. ii.
Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton's Opticks.
2. Paleness.
Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek,
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shakespeare.
3. Purity; cleanness.
The least spot is visible on ermine; but to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that ermine, forsaken the common track of business, which is not always clean. Dryden.
WHI'TEPOT. n. f. A kind of food. Cornwall snab-pye, and Devon whitopot brings. King.
WHITES. n. f. [from albus.] It arises from a laxness of the glands of the uterus, and a cold pituitous blood. Quincy.
WHITETHORN. n. f. A species of thorn. As little as a whitethorn and a pear-tree seem of kin, a cion of the latter will sometimes prosper well, being grafted upon a stock of the former. Boyle.
WHITTEWASH. n. f. [white and wash.] A wash to make the skin teen fair. The clergy, during Cromwell's usurpation, were very much taken up in reforming the female world; I have heard a whole sermon against a whitewash. Addison.

His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter, and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakespeare.
- There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wondrous actions wield. Daniel.
- They are in the dark before they are aware; and then they make a noise only with terms; which, like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Digby on Battles.
- The least of whom could wield
These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed. Milton.
- If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord;
What hope had ours, while yet their pow'r was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you?
He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.
- WIELDY*. adj. [from wield.] Manageable.
- WIERY*. adj. [from wiew.] Manageable.
1. Made of wire: it were better written wiery.
Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;
Off with that wiery coronet, and shew
The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow. Donne.

into several rooms or nests. Grew's Microscopium.
3. Defart; uninhabited.
The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.
4. Savage; uncivilized.
Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature, than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
- Though the inundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.
- When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Daniel.
- May those already curst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay;
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.
5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.
His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.
6. Licentious; ungoverned.
That wild rout that tore the Thracian bard.
Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Shew'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.
7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.
In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.
8. Inordinate; loose.

The paths and bow'rs, doubt not, but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.
- WILDFIRE*. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.
When thou rann'st up Gadhill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou had'st been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakespeare.
- Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn equally, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd.
No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison's Guard.
- In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.
- WILDOOSECHASE*. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.
- If our wits run the wildgoosechase, I have done; for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare.
- Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but loose, giddy frolic?
L'Estrange.
- WILDING*. n. f. [wildelingbe, Dut.] A wild four apple.

WIN

- Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryden.

And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden.
- His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talked very wildly. Female Quixote.
3. Without attention; without judgment.
As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakespeare.
4. Irregularly.
She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.
- WILINESS*. n. f. [from wild.]
1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.
The heath, which was the third part of our plot, I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wiliness. Bac.
2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.
This fame starved justice hath done nothing but prated to me of the wiliness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal street; and every third word a lie. Shakespeare.
- He is giv'n
To sports, to wiliness, and much company. Shakespeare.
3. Savageness; brutality.
He came in like a wild man; but such a wiliness as shew'd his eye-sight had tamed him, full of withered leaves; which though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.
- Vainly thou tell'st me, what the woman's care Shall in the wiliness of the wood prepare. Prior.
4. Uncultivated state.
Their wiliness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.
5. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.
A delirium is but a short wiliness of the imagination; and a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts's Log.
6. Alienation of mind.
Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wiliness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakespeare.
- WILE*. n. f. [wile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.] A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a stratagem; a practice artful, sly, and infi-dious.
Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Daniel.
- My sentence is for open war; of wiles
More unexpert, I boast not; them let those Contrive who need. Milton.
- Life essay'd the surest wile, Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Roscommon.
- So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dryden.
- The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, that there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison's Guardian.
- Wisdom's above suspecting wiles.
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.
- WILFUL*. adj. [will and ful.]
1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.
2. Done or suffered by design.
Sthenobæa herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Fairy Queen.
- Thou to me
Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Milton.
- The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.
- WILFULLY*. adv. [from wilful.]
1. Obstinately; stubbornly.
The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.
- Evil could she conceal her fire, and wilfully perlevered
she in it. Sidney.

WIL

Religion is matter of our free choice; and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson's Sermon.

2. By design; on purpose.
That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.
If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bp. Taylor.
This let him know;
Left, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprised. Milton.

WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.
So full of wilfulness and self-like is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.
Thy causeless ruth repels;
He that his sorrow sought through wilfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Fairy Queen.
Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his feat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare.
A stiff and stubborn obstinacy, is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.
That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By stratagem; fraudulently.
They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Jes.

WILINESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.
The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor; let them be taken in the crafty wiliness that they have imagined. Psalms x. 2.
She supplied the weakness of force by wiliness of art, and advantage of treaty. How. Voc. Forest.

WILL. n. f. [pilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]
1. Choice; arbitrary determination.
Will is the power, which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke's Works.
Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker, b. i.
Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then the may it mend with skill;
If will, then the at will may will forego. Spenser.
These things have a shew of wisdom in will worship and humility. Col. ii. 23.
Will holds the sceptre in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Sir J. Dav.
The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

2. Discretion; choice.
Go then the guilty at thy will chastize. Pope.

3. Command; direction.
At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the fourth wind bloweth. Eccles. xliii. 16.

4. Disposition; inclination; desire.
I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation. Your welcome; what's your will? Shakespeare.
He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.
He said, and with so good a will to die,
Did to his breast the fatal point apply,
It found his heart. Dryden.

5. Power; government.
Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psal.
He had the will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

6. Divine determination.
I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.

7. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.
Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will. Dryd.
Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephen's Sermons.

8. Good-will. Favour; kindness.
I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page. Shakespeare.

9. Good-will. Right intention.
Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good will. Phil. i. 15.

10. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.
11. [Contracted from William.] Will with a wisp, Jack with a lantern.
Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying places, places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in summer, and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract. Now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire; but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants or carcasses by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Mussh.
Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

To WILL. v. a. [wiltgon, Gothick; pillan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]
1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done.
To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.
Let Richard be restored to his blood,
As will the rest; to will the Winchester. Shakespeare.
I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his pre-determining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.
Whoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing, which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.
A man that fits still, is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.
She's too rough for me;
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shakespeare.

3. To command; to direct.
St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to relieve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.
How rarely does it meet with this time's guide,
When man was willed to love his enemies. Shakespeare.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakespeare.
He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win. Knight.
If they had any business, his Majesty willed that they should attend. Carendon.
'Tis your's, O queen! to will
The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.
Let the circumstances of life be what, or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense; of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.
I will come. I am determined to come; importing choice.
Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come; importing necessity.
Wilt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.
He will come. He is resolved to come; or it must be that he must come, importing either choice or necessity.
It will come. It must be so that it must come; importing necessity.
The plural follows the analogy of the singular.
WILL and WILL, among the English Saxons, as wille at this day among the Germans, signified many. So willemet is the defender of many; wilfrid, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Poly-crates, and Polyphilus. Gib. Cram.

WILLING. adj. [from will.]
1. Inclined to any thing.
He willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisd.
Some other able, and as willing, pays
The rigid satisfaction. Milton.
Can any man trust a better support under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

2. Pleased;

WIL

2. Pleased; desirous.
3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.
3. As many as were willing hearted brought bracelets and ear-rings. Ex. xxxv. 22.

4. Ready; complying.
Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the willing to obey. Hooker.
We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.
He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milt.

5. Chosen.
They're held with his melodious harmony,
In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.
Forbear, if thou hast pity,
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.

7. Consenting.
How can hearts not free serve willing. Milton.

WILLINGLY. adv. [from will.]
1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.
That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.
I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your matter wed me to. Shakespeare.
This ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass, it shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.
The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILLINGNESS. n. f. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.
We praise the things we hear with much more willingness, than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben. Johnson.
It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.
Force never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley; but are storm'd in vain;
Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less,
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WILLOW. n. f. [pelie, Saxon; salix, Lat. gwiolus, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.
It hath amentaceous flowers consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Mil.
I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken, to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shakespeare.
In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakespeare.
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakespeare.
When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marries he resorts, obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows, which the moisture feeds. Sandy.
Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighbouring willows hung,
Nor joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.

WILLOWISH. adj. [willom.] Resembling the colour of willow. Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.

WILLOWWORT. n. f. A plant.
The flower consists of several leaves, produced from the inclosures of the flower-cup, placed circularly, and expanded like a rose; from the centre of the flower-cup rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit of two cells, full of small seeds, wrapped up in the flower-cup. Miller.

WILY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent.
They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.
In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicions mark
As from his wit, and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton's Par. Lost.
Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind, is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South's Sermon.
My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love laid the Dryden.

WIMBLE. n. f. [wimpele, old Dutch, from wimelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

WIL

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fears to broach:
He 'says the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryd.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep-piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The trepan is like a wimble, used by joiners. Sharp.

WIMBLE. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched:
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he that earst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WIMPLE. n. f. [guimpe, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser perhaps by mistake wimble.
So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For the had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimble thrown away. Fairy Q.
The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins. Israel ii. 22.

To WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.
The fame did hide,
Under a veil that wimble was full low. Fairy Q.

WIN. Whether initial or final in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people; from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the name of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibb.

To WIN. v. a. [Pret. wan and won; part. pa. won, pinna, Saxon; winnen, Dutch.]
1. To gain by conquest.
The town of Gaza where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Knelles.
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.
Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Preis but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryden.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.
Loyalty is still the same
Whether it win or lose the game:
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras, b. iii.
I five years at Tarentum wan
The questionship, and then our love began. Denham.
Thy well breath'd horse
Impels the flying car and wins the course. Dryd.

3. To gain something withheld.
Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4. To obtain.
Thy virtue wan me; with virtue preserve me. Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.
When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakespeare.
Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath fought to win me. Shak.

5. To gain by play.
He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.

6. To gain by persuasion.
They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.
She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakespeare.
That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. n.
1. To gain the victory.
Nor is it ought but just,
That he who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.
You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.
You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like music every breast controul;
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground.
The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakespeare.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.
Charles I will play no more to night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play. Shak.

WIN

To WINCE. v. n. [guings, Welsh.] To kick as impatient of a rider, or of pain.
I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince.
The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his fence.
WINCH. n. f. [guincher, French, to twist.] A windlass; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.
Put a winch with the wheel.
To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince, or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.
We who have free souls,
It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;
Our withers are unwrung.
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it.
This last allusion gall'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd he not to wince, tho' shrewdly pain'd.
Their consciences are gall'd, and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mettle.
WINDPIPE. n. f.
There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the windpipe; which if it open in the morning, you may be sure, a fair day will follow.
WIND. n. f. [pinb, Saxon; wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]
1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us, wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients, a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air.
The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.
Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over low'ring hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.
Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth.
Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction, more in one place than another, by the sunbeams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions.
2. Direction of the blast from a particular point. As eastward;
westward.
I'll give thee a wind.
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
T' th' shipman's card.
3. Breath; power or act of respiration.
If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.
His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth,
but justly observ'd the rule of drinking with one breath.
The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purify old men, seems to agree most with the orange.
It stop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd.
4. Air caused by any action.
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.
In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the found-board breathes.
5. Breath modulated by an instrument.
Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create found;
as in pipes and wind instruments.
Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.
6. Air impregnated with scent.
A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind.
7. Flatulence; windiness.
It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.
Think not with wind of airy threats to awe.
9. Down the WIND. To decay.
A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still.
10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper-hand.
Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much, for else counsellors will but take the wind of him; instead of giving free counsel.
To WIND. v. a. [pinban, Sax. winden, Dutch. from the noun.]
1. To blow; to found by inflation.
The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn upon the cattle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall.
Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain.
Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the thrill horn, or spread the waving net.
2. To turn round; to twist.
Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low.
The figure of a sturdy woman done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths, in which act the wings out the water that made the fountain.
Wind the wood-bine round this arbour.
3. To regulate in action.
He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a piny genius,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.
In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and wind'd by the tail.
4. To note; to follow by scent.
To turn by shifts or expedients.
Whence turning of religion's trade
The means to turn and wind a made.
6. To introduce by insinuation.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all feason'd offices, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical.
Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom.
Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse.
7. To change.
Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy.
8. To entwine; to enclose; to encircle.
Sleep thou and I will wind thee in my arms.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance.
All wound with adders who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.
9. To WIND out. To extricate.
When he found himself dangerously embarked he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in.
10. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.
Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain.
11. To WIND up. [Used of a watch] To convolve the spring;
to put in order to a certain end.
I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel.
Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourcore years,
Yet freshly ran he on, ten winters more:
Till like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still.
Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton, which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still, or gone true.
12. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.
These he did so wind up to his purpose that they withdrew from the court.
When they could not coolly convince him, they rais'd, and call'd him an heretic: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity.
13. To WIND up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.
Hylas! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing.

WIN

Your lute may wind its strings but little higher
To tune their notes to that immortal quire.
To WIND up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child chang'd father.
The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Pottery of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:
Peace, the charm's wound up.
To WIND. v. n.
1. To turn; to change.
So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our feeblest was a mile behind.
2. To turn; to be convolved.
Some plants can support themselves, and some others creep along the ground, and wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves.
Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their centers; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the stair-case.
3. To move round.
If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about, till thou hast topp'd the hill.
4. To proceed in flexures.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here.
He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars.
It was a rock winding with one ascent.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again.
You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds,
Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the palfies open, wind along.
Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that wind'd to the cave.
5. To be extricated; to be disentangled.
Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison.
WINDBOUND. adj. [wind and bound.] Confined by contrary winds.
Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd.
When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house; and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are windbound.
Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be windbound?
WINDEGG. n. f. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.
Sound eggs sink, and such as are addled swim; as do also those termed hypenemia, or windeggs.
WINDER. n. f. [from wind.] An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.
To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack to fall on their heads.
2. A plant that twists itself round others.
Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony.
WINDFALL. n. f. [wind and fall.] Fruit blown down from the tree.
Gather now, if ripe, your Winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls.
WINDFLOWER. n. f. The anemone. A flower.
WINDGALL. n. f. [wind and gall.]
Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fet-lock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent fraining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows.
His horse infected with the falshion, full of windgalls, and sped with pavins.
WINDGUN. n. f. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.
The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe; the strife and distention of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or flutes within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted.

WIN

Forc'd from windguns, lead itself can fly,
And wondrous flugs cut swiftly through the sky.
WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]
1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.
A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner,
and in the morning.
Orifices are prepared for the letting forth of the rarefied spirits in ructus, or windings, the common effects of all fermented liquors.
2. Tendency to generate wind.
Sena loseth somewhat of its windiness by decocting; and,
generally, subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.
3. Tumour; puffiness.
From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this.
WINDING. n. f. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.
It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us.
The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.
WINDINGSHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.
These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.
The great windingsheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes.
The chaste Penelope, having, as she thought, lost Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband.
WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lass.]
1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.
2. A handle by which any thing is turned.
Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlasses, and with assays of byas,
By indirections find directions out.
WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle.
WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.
We like Don Quixote do advance
Against a windmill our vain lance.
Such a failing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impelled from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill.
Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that water-mills do.
His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it.
WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]
1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intromitted.
Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see.
A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields.
He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily.
When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too.
2. The frame of glass or any other materials that covers the aperture.
To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still!
In the sun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens.
3. Lines crossing each other.
The fav'rite, that just begins to prattle,
Is very humorfome, and makes great clutter,
'Till he has wind'ros on his bread and butter.
4. An aperture resembling a window.
To WINDOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with windows.
Between these half columns above, the whole room was windowed round.
With pert flat eyes she window'd well its head,
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead.
2. To place at a window.
Wouldst thou be wind'w'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with placid arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative shame?
3. To

WIN

3. To break into openings.
Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your boufeless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shak. King Lear.
- WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath;
the arteria.
Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shak. H. V.
The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration: thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.
The quacks of government, who fat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Confider'd timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudibras.
Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages. Ray.
The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Towards the wind.
WINDY. adj. [from wind.]
1. Consisting of wind.
See what showers arise,
Blown with the windy tempest of my soul
Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eyes and heart. Shak. J. C.
Subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon.
2. Next the wind.

WIT

- Wit* lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance, or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another, ideas, wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.
- Cou'd any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?
If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.
3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy.
All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter, than what I invent, and is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare.
His works become the frippery of wit. B. Johnson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdu'd the world. Sprat.
The definition of wit is only this; that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.
Let a lord once but own the happy lines;
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.
4. A man of fancy.
Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe; and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estr.
A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.
To tell them wou'd a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.
5. A man of genius.
Searching wits, of more mechanic parts;
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts:
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.
How vain that second life in others breath?
Th' estate which wits inherit after death;
Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's curse, without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.
6. Sense; judgment.
Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.
Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence in faction knit,
Uproar the chair of wit. B. Johnson.
Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.
7. In the plural. Sound mind; intellect not crazed.
If our wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done: for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakespeare. Lear.
Are his wits late? is he not light of brain? Shakespeare.
Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him; but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unfatiable man. Ecclesiast. xxxi. 20.
Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every finner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.
No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.
8. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients.
How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.
I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.
Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.
The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.
- WITCHCRAFT. n. f. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. Abselete.
He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witchcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden's Remains.
- WITCHCRACKER. n. f. [wit and crack.] A joker; one who breaks a jest. Shakespeare.
A college of witchcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.
- WITWORM. n. f. [wit and worm.] One that feeds on wit; a canker of wit.

WIT

- Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. B. Johnson.
- WITCH. n. f. [picce, Saxon.]
1. A woman given to unlawful arts.
Wife judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.
When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instance of it. Addison's Spectator, N^o 117.
2. [From pic, Saxon.] A winding sinuous bank.
Leave me those hills where harb'rough his to see;
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.

WIVES. n. f. The plural of wife.
A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from approbation of his own reason. Spenser's Ireland.
WIZARD. n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a he-witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.
Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakespeare.
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare's Richard III.
That damn'd wizard, hid in fly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent
The aidless innocent lady his wiv'd prey.
The prophecies of wizards old
Increas'd her terror, and her fall foretold.
The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.
WO. n. f. [Saxon.]
1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.
The king is mad; how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woe by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe weary'd tongue is still. Shakespeare.
Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, the eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O'er dreary wastes, they weep each other's woe. Pope.
2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow wo is; anciently wo wurth; pa punp, Saxon.

Wo to the vanquish'd, woe! Dryden's Albion.
3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a wo or curse in all the fiores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice; of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one universal confusion. Saith's Sermons.
4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive; and in exclamation an adjective, as particularly in the following lines:
We are we, fir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

W O L

5. Wo is used by Shakespeare for a stop or cessation; from the particle wo pronounced by carters to their horses when they would have them stop.
Love's a mighty lord,
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess, I to him bow.
There is no wo to his correction. Shakespeare.
WOAD. n. f. [Sax. Saxon.] A plant. Shakespeare.
The flower consists of four leaves, which are disposed in form of a cross; out of whose flower cup rises the point, which afterwards turns to a fruit in the shape of a tongue, flat at the edge, gaping two ways, having but one cell, in which is contained for the most part one oblong seed; is cultivated in England for the use of dyers, who use it for laying the foundation of many colours.
In times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When drefs was monstrous, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.
WOEGONE. n. f. [Sax. and begone.] Lost in woe; distracted in woe; overwhelmed with sorrow. Shakespeare.
Such a man, oh! to sland'ring
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And wold have told him half his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue.
Tancred he saw his life's joy set at naught,
So woe-begone was he with pains of love.
WOFT. The obsolete participle passive from To WAIT.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have woft,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.

 The predictions Bickerstaff published, relating to his death, too much affected and worked on his imagination. Swift.
 10. To make way.
 Body shall up to spirit work. Milton.
 Who would trust chance, since all men have the seeds
 Of good and ill, which should work upward first? Dryden.
 11. To be tossed or agitated.
 Vex'd by wintry storms, Benacus raves, Confus'd with working sands and rolling waves. Addison.
 To WORK. v. a.
 1. To make by degrees.
 Sidelong he works his way.
 Through winds, and waves, and storms he works his way,
 Impatient for the battle: one day more
 Will set the victor thundering at our gates. Addison.
 2. To labour; to manufacture.
 He could have told them of two or three gold mines, and a silver mine, and given the reason why they forbore to work them at that time, and when they left off from working them. Raleigh's Apology.
 The chaos, by the Divine Power, was wrought from one form into another, 'till it settled into an habitable earth. Burn.
 This mint is to work off part of the metals found in the neighbouring mountains. Addison.
 The young men acknowledged in love-letters, sealed with a particular wax, with certain enchanting words wrought upon the seals, that they died for her. Tatler.
 They now begin to work the wondrous frame,
 To shape the parts, and raise the vital flame. Blackmore.
 The industry of the people works up all their native commodities to the last degree of manufacture. Swift.
 3. To bring by action into any state.
 So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
 Of rushing torrents and descending rains,
 Works itself clear, and, as it runs, refines,
 'Till by degrees the floating mirror shines. Addison's Cato.
 4. To influence by successive impulses.
 If you would work any man, know his nature and fashions, and so lead him. Bacon.
 To hasten his destruction, come yourself,
 And work your royal father to his ruin. A. Philips.

 Fly the dreadful war,
 That in thyself thy lesser parts do move,
 Outrageous anger, and woe-working jar. Fairy Queen.
 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour. Rom. xiii. 10.
 Our light affliction for a moment worketh for us a far more eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 18.
 We might work any effects, not holpen by the co-operation of spirits, but only by the unity of nature. Bacon.
 Moisture, although it doth not pass through bodies without communication of some substance, as heat and cold do, yet it worketh effects by qualifying of the heat and cold. Bacon.
 Such power, being above all that the understanding of man can conceive, may well work such wonders. Drummond.
 God,

WOR

God, only wife, to punish pride of wit,
Among mens wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought.
Of the tree,
Which, tasted, work knowledge of good and evil,
Thou may'st not: in the day thou eat'st, thou dy'st. Milton.

6. To manage.
More personal valour could not supply want of knowledge in building and working ships. Arbutnot.

7. To put to labour; to exert.
Now, Marcus, thy virtue's on the proof;
Put forth thy utmost strength, work every nerve,
And call up all thy father in thy soul. Addison's Cato.

8. To embroider with a needle.
Not only every society, but every single person has enough to do to work out his own salvation. Decay of Piety.

9. To WORK out. To effect by toil.
The mind takes the hint from the poet, and works out the rest by the strength of her own faculties. Addison.

10. To WORK out. To erase; to efface.
Tears of joy for your returning spilt,
Work out and expiate our former guilt. Dryden.

11. To WORK up. To raise.
That which is wanting to work up the pity to a greater height, was not afforded me by the story. Dryden.

This lake resembles a sea, when worked up by storms. Addison.

The sun, that rolls his chariot o'er their heads, Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks. Addison's Cato.

We should inure ourselves to such thoughts, 'till they have worked up our souls into filial awe and love of him. Atterbury.

WORK. n. f. [from work, Saxon; werk, Dutch.]

1. Toil; labour; employment.
Bread, correction, and work for a servant. Ecclesiast. xxxiii.

In the bottom of some mines in Germany there grow vegetables, which the work-folks say have magical virtue. Bacon.

The ground, unbid, gives more than we can ask;
But work is pleasure, when we chuse our task. Dryden.

2. A state of labour.
All the world is perpetually at work, only that our poor mortal lives should pass the happier for that little time we possess them, or else end the better when we lose them: upon this occasion riches came to be coveted, honours esteemed, friendship pursued, and virtues admired. Temple.

3. Bumbling attempt.
It is pleasant to see what work our adversaries make with this innocent canon: sometimes 'tis a mere forgery of hereticks, and sometimes the bishops that met there were not so wise as they should have been. Stirlingfleet.

4. Flowers or embroidery of the needle.
Round her work the did empale,
With a fair border wrought of lundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy-winding trail. Spenser.

That handkerchief, you gave me: I must take out the work: a likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There, give it your hobbyhorse: whereforever you had it, I'll take out no work on't. Shakespeare's Otello.

5. Any fabric or compages of art.
Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.

6. Action; feat; deed.
The instrumentality of riches to works of charity, have rendered it necessary in every Christian commonwealth by laws to secure propriety. Hammond.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixt bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intire application of the agents, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby.

Nothing lovelier can be found in woman,
Than good works in her husband to promote.
While as the works of bloody Mars employ'd,
The wanton youth inglorious peace enjoy'd. Pope.

7. Any thing made.
Where is that holy fire, which verse is said
To have? Is that enchanting force decay'd?
Verse, that draws nature's works from nature's law,
There, her best work, to her work cannot draw. Donne.

O fairest of creation! last and best
Of all God's works! creature, in whom excels
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd;
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet,
How art thou lost! Milton's Paradise Lost.

8. Management; treatment.
Let him alone; I'll go another way to work with him. Shak.

9. To set on WORK. To employ; to engage.
It setteth those wits on work in better things, which would be else employed in worse. Hooker.

WORKER. n. f. [from work.] One that works.
Ye fair nymphs, which oftentimes have loved
The cruel worker of your kindly smarts, Prepare yourselves, and open wide your hearts. Spenser.

WOR

His father was a worker in brass. Kings vii. 14.

You spoke me fair; but even then betrayed me: depart from me, you professors of holiness, but workers of iniquity. South's Sermons.

WORKFELLOW. n. f. [from work and fellow.] One engaged in the same work with another. Rem.

Timotheus, my workfellow, and Lucius, salute you. Rem.

WORKHOUSE. n. f. [from work and house.]

1. A place in which any manufacture is carried on.
The quick forge and workinghouse of thought. Shak. H.V.

Protagenes had his workhouse in a garden out of town, where he was daily finishing those pieces he begun. Dryden.

2. A place where idlers and vagabonds are condemned to labour.
Hast thou suffered at any time by vagabonds and pilferers?
Ereem and promote those useful charities which remove such pests into prisons and workhouses. Atterbury.

WORKINGDAY. n. f. [from work and day.] Day on which labour is permitted; not the sabbath.

How full of briars is this workingday world? Shakespeare.

Will you have me, lady?
—No, my lord, unless I might have another for working- days; your grace is too costly to wear every day. Shakespeare.

WORKMAN. n. f. [from work and man.] An artificer; a maker of any thing.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakespeare.

If prudence works, who is a more cunning workman? Wisd.

There was no other cause preceding than his own will, no other matter than his own power, no other work- man than his own word, and no other consideration than his own infinite goodness. Raleigh.

They have inscribed the pedestal, to shew their value for the workman. Addison on Italy.

WORKMANLY. adj. [from workman.] Skillful; well performed; workmanlike.

WORKMANLY. adv. Skillfully; in a manner becoming a workman.

In having but fortie foot workmanly dight,
Take favour on enough for a lord and a knight. Tusser.

We will fetch thee straight
Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds,
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Shakespeare.

WORKMANSHIP. n. f. [from workman.]

1. Manufacture; something made by any one.
Nor any skill'd in workmanship embold'd,
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

By how much Adam exceeded all men in perfection, by being the immediate workmanship of God, by so much did that chosen garden exceed all parts of the world. Raleigh.

He moulded him to his own idea, delighting in the choice of the materials; and afterwards, as great architects use to do, in the workmanship of his regal hand. Watson.

What more reasonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanship, he shall set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures? Tillotson.

2. The skill of a worker; the degree of skill discovered in any manufacture.

The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd,
Came down to prove the truth, and due reward
For her praise-worthy workmanship to yield. Spenser.

3. The art of working.
If there were no metals, 'tis a mystery to me how Tubal-cain could ever have taught the workmanship and use of them. Woodward's Natural History.

WORKMASTER. n. f. [from work and master.] The performer of any work.

What time this world's great workmaster did cast
To make all things, such as we now behold,
It seems that he before his eyes had plac'd
A goodly pattern, to whose perfect mould
He fashion'd them so comely. Spenser.

Every carpenter and workmaster that laboureth. Ecclesiast. xxxviii.

Delire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify
The great workmaster, leads to no excess. Milt. Parad. Lost.

WORKWOMAN. n. f. [from work and woman.]

1. A woman skilled in needle-work.

The moist fine-fingred workwoman on ground,
Arascline, by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

2. A woman that works for hire.

WORKDAY. n. f. [Corrupted from workingday.] The day not the sabbath.

Tell her but a workday fortune. Shakespeare.

The other days, and thou
Make up one man; whose face thou art,
The workdays are the back part;
The burden of the week lies there. Herbert.

Holydays.

WOR

Holydays, if haply they were gone, Gay.

Like workdays, I with would soon be done:
WORLD. n. f. [from world, Saxon; werld, Dutch.]

1. World is the great collective idea of all bodies whatever. Loc.

2. System of beings.
Begotten before all worlds. Nicene Creed.

Of heav'n and earth conspicuous first began. Milton.

3. The earth; the terraqueous globe.
He the world
Built on circumfluous waters. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Present state of existence.
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I was not come into the world then. L'Estrange.

He wittingly brought evil into the world. More.

Christian fortitude consists in suffering for the love of God, whatever hardships can befall in the world. Dryden.

5. A secular life.
Happy is he that from the world retires,
And carries with her what the world admires.
Thrice happy she, whose young thoughts fixt above,
While she is lovely, does to heav'n make love;
I need not urge your promise, ere you find An entrance here, to leave the world behind? Waller.

By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Publick life.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

7. Business of life; trouble of life.
Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's suspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

8. Great multitude.
You a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means. Shakespeare.

Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company; Shakespeare.

For you in my respect are all the world. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

I leave to speak of a world of other attempts furnished by kings. Raleigh's Apology.

What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusions upon the contrary practice. Bp. Sanderfon.

Just to romances are, for what else
Is in them all, but love and battles?
O'th' first of these we have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o'th' latter. Hudibras.

It brought into this world a world of woe. Milton.

There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion. L'Estrange.

Marriage draws a world of business on our hands, subjects us to law-suits, and loads us with domestic cares. Dryden.

From thy corporeal prison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.

Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And feel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

9. Mankind; an hyperbolical expression for many.
This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one fort are named the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than of God. Hooker.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd.
Why dost thou shew me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

He was willing to declare to all the world, that, as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England, so he could maintain the same by unanswerable reasons. Clarendon.

10. Course of life.
Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Clarissa.

Rome was to sway the world. Milton.

This through the east just vengeance hurl'd,
And lost poor Antony the world. Prior.

12. The manners of men.
Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakespeare.

What start at this! when sixty years have spread
Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
Is this the all observing age could gain?
Or hast thou known the world too long in vain? Dryden.

WOR

If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,
May Juba ever live in ignorance. Addison's Cato.

The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better;
To know the world! a modern phrase
For visits, ombre, balls and plays. Swift.

13. A collection of wonders; a wonder. Obsolete.

The balfa having recommended Barbaruffa, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Knolles.

14. Time. A sense originally Saxon; now only used in World without end.

15. In the world. In Possibility.
All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

16. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense; now little used.
He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world to placed. Sidney, b. ii.

WORLTLINESS. n. f. [from worldly.] Covetousness; addiction to gain.

WORLTLING. n. f. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.
Bastemind wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass. Stany.

The one fort are nam'd the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.

God of the world and worldlings,
Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Fa. Queen.

For his weeping in the needful stream;
Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Shakespeare's As You Like It.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows:
The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
Thinks only on the wealth he left behind. Dryden.

If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

WORLDELY. adj. [from world.]

1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.
He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command? Shakespeare.

Tell me, ye toad-swol'n, flinty Pharaoh's, tell;
Can worldly pleasures equal pains of hell? N. Richards.

The fortitude of a christian consists in patience, not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.

Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.

They'll practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on that their lords Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

3. Human; common; belonging to the world.
Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly mean, but that one only hand which erected it. Hooker.

Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

WORLDELY. adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.
It is a token of a worldly wife man, not to contend in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Raleigh.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wife,
By simply meek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

'Tis his cannot be done, if my will be worldly, or voluptuously disposed. South's Sermons.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

WORM. n. f. [from worm, Saxon; worm, Dutch; vermis, Lat.]

1. A small harmless serpent that lives in the earth.
Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakespeare.

Help me into some house,
Or I shall faint;—a plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms meat of me. Shakespeare.

I hough worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold:
I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and feed him with these eyes. Sandys's Par.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Infect or worm. Milton.

 Pick'd from the worm-holes of long vanished days,
 Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shaksp. Hen. V.
 6. Something tormenting.
 The worm of conscience fill begnaw thy foul. Shaksp.
 The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.
 7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round ; any thing spiral.
 The threads of fcrews, when bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other ; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle ; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worms, and the bottom of the groove. Moxon.
 To WORM, v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.
 When debates and fretting jealousy,
 Did worm and work within you more and more,
 Your colour faded. Herbert.
 To WORM, v. a.

 They find themselves wormed out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.
 2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.
 Everyone that keepeth a dog, should have him wormed. Mort.
 WORMEATEN, adj. [worm and eaten.]
 1. Gnawed by worms.
 For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shaksppeare.
 2. Old ; worthless.
 His chamber all was hanged about with rolls,
 And old records from antient times deriv'd ;
 Some made in books, some in long parchment scrolls.
 That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser.
 Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 'Tis like a wormeaten trunks cloth'd in feals skin ;
 Or grave, that's dust without, and flink within. Donne.
 WORMWOOD, n. f. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body.]
 Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward ; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads ; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Mill.
 She was wean'd ; I had then laid Wormwood to my dug. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
 Pituitous Cacochymia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Flory on the Humours.
 I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that favour. Locke.
 WORMY, adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.
 Spirits that in crowsays and floods have burial,
 Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shaksppeare.
 Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
 Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb,
 Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton.
 WORN, part. pass. of wear.
 His is a maiden shield,
 Guileless of fight : mine batter'd, hew'd and bor'd,
 Worn out of service, must forlake his lord. Dryden.
 What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.
 The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.
 Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
 A worn-out trick ; would't thou be thought in earnest, Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury. Addison.
 WORNIL, n. f.
 In the backs of cows in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Essex we call wornils, being first only a small knot in the skin. Berham's Physico-Theology.
 To WORMY, v. a. [pouzen, Saxon : whence probably the word wormy.]
 1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.
 If we with thrice fuch powers left at home,
 Cannot defend our own doors from the dogs,
 Let us be worm'd. Shaksp. Hen. V.
 The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but play'd with in their paws. K. Charles.
 'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be deliver'd up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry the wolves. L'Estrange.

W O R

This revives and imitates that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up christians in the skins of wild beasts, that so they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs. Scath's Sermons.

2. To harass, or persecute brutally.

Then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her. Shaksfp. Winter's Tale.

Witness when I was worried with thy peals. Milton.

It has pleased Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of exaction, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation. Scath's Sermons.

All his care

Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
Which worried him only for being mine. Scath's

I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever. Addison.

Let them rail,

And then worry one another at their pleasure. Raise.

Madam, contrive and invent,

And worry him out, 'till he gives his consent. Swift.

WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad: bad's, worse, worft.
[purj, Saxon.] More bad; more ill.

Why should he see your faces worfe liking than the children of your fort? Daniel's 10.

Whether this or worfe, love not the faithful side. Milton.

In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worfe to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them miserable. Lacks.

WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.

The more one fickers, the worfe at ease he is. Shaksfp.

The WORSE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The loss; not the advantage; i. not the better.

Was never man, who most conquests achiev'd,
But sometimes had the worfe, and lost by war. Spenser.

Judah was put to the worfe before Israel; and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings xiv. 12.

2. Something less good.

A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worfe of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Clarissa.

To WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.

Perhaps more valid arms,

Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worfe our foes. Milton.

Wo'RSER. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worfe with the usual comparative termination.

Gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my worser spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakspeare.

A dreadful quiet fell, and worser far
Than arms, a fullen interval of war. Dryden.

Wo'RSHIP. n. f. [*peor*ſcype, Saxon.]

1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.

Thou hadst him lower than the angels, to crown him

Nor never laid his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shakespeare.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head, nimble in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,
And with indented glides did slip away. Shak. As you like it.
The beard of an oat is wreathed at the bottom, and one smooth entire straw at the top: they take only the part that is wreath'd, and cut off the other. Bacon.
2. It is here used for wreath.
Impatient of the wound,
He rolls and *wreath*s his shining body round;
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide. Gay.
3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.
Two chains of pure gold of wreathen work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the oches. Ex. xxviii.
As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots; so in such base noisome hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indissolubly wreath'd and twisted together.
Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd a bow'r
Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour. Dryden.
4. To encircle as a garland.
In the flow'r that *wreath*s the sparkling bowl,
Fell adds his, and pois'nous serpents rowl. Prior.
5. To encircle as with a garland.
For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding ivy *wreath*s her lance. Dryden.
The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd, and rich with hostile spoil, Severs the bull to Mars. Prior.
WREATHY. adj. [from wreath.] Spiral; curled; twisted.
That which is preferred at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about, which agree with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown.
WRECK. n. f. [from wreke, Saxon, a miserable person; wreack, Dutch, a ship broken.]
1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.
Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
'Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.
Like those that see their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,
That death may not them idly find attend
To their uncertain task, but work to meet their end. Daniel.
Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.
2. Dissolution by violence.
Not only Paradise,
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Ruin; destruction.
Whether he was Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakespeare.
4. It is misprinted here for wreak.
He cry'd as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threaten. Spenser.
To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.

If wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shak. Macbeth.
The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.
2. To ruin.
Weak and envy'd, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.
3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.
I faint! I die! the goddess cry'd:
O cruel, couldst thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on? Paricide! Shakespeare.
Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.
To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck; to be ruined.
With manlier objects we must try,
His constancy, with such as have more flesh
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd. Milton.

W R E

WREN. n. f. [from wren, Saxon.] A small bird.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight, Shakespeare.
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakespeare.
All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds, yet the discoveries of America have shewed us one far less, the hum-bird not much exceeding a beetle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To WRENCH. v. a. [from wrench, Saxon; wrenchen, Dutch.]
1. To pull by violence; to wrench; to force.
Wrench his sword from him. Shakespeare.
Oh form!
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Shakespeare.
Give me that mattock and the wrenching woman. Shakespeare.
Caesar's army, wanting something, demanded a million or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires. Bacon.
Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs. Dryden.
Achilles wrench'd it out, and sent again
The hostile gift. Dryden.
Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground. Gull Travels.
2. To sprain; to distort.
O most small fault!
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show?
Which, like an engine, wrenched my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakespeare.
You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay. Swift.
WRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A violent pull or twist.
2. A sprain.
Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.
3. WRENCHES, in Chaucer, signifies means, sleights, subtilties; which is, I believe, the sense here.
He resolv'd to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
To WREST. v. a. [from wrest, Saxon.]
1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.
To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Ascham.
To what wretched state reserv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.
Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hand,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood,
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addison.
2. To distort; to writhe; to force.
So far to extend their speeches, is to wrest them against their meaning. Hooker.
My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakespeare.
Wrest once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakespeare.
WREST. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Distortion; violence.
Whereas it is concluded, out of those so weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill: what needed this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.
2. It is used in Spenser and Shakespeare for an active or moving power: I suppose, from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his rest.
Adown he kelt it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a gronelling found. F. 2.
Antenor is such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slacken,
Wanting his manage. Shakespeare.
WRESTER. n. f. [from wrest.] He who wrests.
To WRESTLE. v. n. [from wrest.]

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wifeman's Surgery.
To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend.
I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakespeare.
He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

WRESTLER. n. f. [from wrestle.]
1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletic art.
Was not Charles, the duke's wrestler, here? Shakespeare.
When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,
Old Milo wept, to see his naked arm. Dehnam.

'Tis not from whom, but where we live;
The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He that the world subdu'd, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.
So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, 'till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n. Waller.
Two wrestlers help to pull each other down. Dryden.

WRETCH. n. f. [precca, Saxon.]

1. A miserable mortal.
When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence.
She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That the poor wretch, for grief can speak no more. Shak.
The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakespeare.
Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply:
View not what heav'n ordains, with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.
Bale-minded wretches, are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some paultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? Sidney.

Has these poor men in question: never saw I Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forwear themselves as often as they speak. Shakespeare.
Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile. Daniel's Civil War.
When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of flight, or ironical pity, or contempt.
When soon away the wail do go;
Poor wretch was never frightened so:
He thought his wings were much too slow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted. Dryden's Nymphid.
Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She issues forth, and runs along her loom:
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dryden.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.
Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch the put into her breast. Sidney.

WRETCHED. adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.
These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcher fort there are, on whom, whereas nature hath be-flowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind,
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller.
Why do'st thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.
3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some mens minds, that the best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing not worth the keepings, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Affected noise is the most wretched thing.
That to contempt can empty scribblers bring. Rescommen.
Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess. Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.
An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness. Sidney.

W R I

WRETCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably; unhappily.
From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into, the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon.

2. Meanly; despicably.
When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man stick,
who finds himself guilty and baffled too? Saul.

WRETCHEDNESS. n. f. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.
My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am, and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney.

He 'gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that caitiff's thrall the thrall of wretchedness. F. & C.

Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then Such rancor in the hearts of mighty men? Spenser.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace,
'till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakespeare.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRETCHLESS. n. f. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for rectless.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretchless presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it. Hammund.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchless oisiance? Government of the Tongue.

To WRIGGLE. v. n. [wrgan, Saxon; wiggelen, Dutch.] To move to and fro with short motions.

If sleep or thy lamb fall a wriggling with tail,
Go by and by search it, whilst help may prevail. Tusser.

O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over. Hudibras.

A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost. L'Estrange.

WRIGGLETAIL. n. f. For wrigglingtail. See WRIGGLE.

My ragged ronts all thiver and shake;
They went in the wind, wagg their wriggletails,
Peack as a peacock, but nought it avails. Spenser.

WRIGHT. n. f. [wrihta, wrihta, Saxon.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.

It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine Architect, and contemplating the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance. Cheyne.

The verb To write has the same found with wright, a workman, right or equity, and rite or ceremony; but spelled very differently. Watts's Logic.

To WRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass. wringed and wrung.

easy and freight fortune, he would have been an excellent man of business. Clarendon.

6. To force by violence; to extort.
I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

That which I must speak,
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me, and tell to them my secret. Milton.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

WRINKLE. n. f. [wriuncle, Saxon; wrinkel, Dutch.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.
Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? Shakespeare. Richard II.

She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle of old age. Hawel's Vocal Forest.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow.

Though you and all your senseless tribes,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at fifteen;
No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore. Dryden.

2. Any roughness.
Our British heav'n was all serene;
No threatening cloud was nigh,
Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky.

To WRINKLE. v. a. [wriuncle, Saxon.]

1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.
It is still fortune's use
To let the wrinkled man outlive his wealth,

Though I now write fifty years,
I have had, and have my peers. Ben. Johnson.
He writes himself divina providentia, whereas other bishops only use divina permissione. Ayliffe.

6. To compose; to form compositions;
Chaste moral writing we may learn from hence,
Neglect of which no wit can recompense;
The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds. Waller.
They can write up to the dignity and character of their authors. Pelton on the Classics.

WRITER. n. f. [from write.]
1. One who practices the art of writing.
2. An author.
All three were ruined by justice and sentence, as delinquents;
and all three famous writers. Bacon.
Peaceable times are the best to live in, though not so proper to furnish materials for a writer. Addison's Freeholder.
Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the public good. Addison's Freeholder.
Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omisions he most laments. Swift.

TO WRITHE. v. a. [from write, Saxon.]

22. A rascally, yea, forsooth, knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakep.peare.

YEA

From these Philippinae are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too? Abb't's Description of the World.

Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden. Gen. iii. 1.

Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay. Math. v.

All the promises of God are yea, and amen; that is, are verified, which is the importance of yea, and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.

They durst abide Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thrond Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day? Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself; yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

To YEAD, or YEDE. v. n. preterite yede. [This word seems to have been corruptly formed from geob, the Saxon preterite of gan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure, And to their folds yead at their own leisure. Spenser.

Then had the knight this lady yede aloof, And to an hill her self withdrew aside, From whence the might behold that battle's proof, And eke be safe from danger far desir'd. Fairy Queen.

Yet for the yede therat half aghast, And Kiddy the door sparred after her fast. Spenser.

That fame mighty man of God, That blood red billows like a wall'd front, On either side disparted with his rod, 'Till that his army dry-foot through them yed. Spenser.

To YEARN. v. n. [canian, Saxon.] To bring young Used of sheep. The skilful shepherd pecl'd me certain wands; He struck them up before the fulsome ewes, Who, then conceiving, did in yearning time Fole party-colour'd lambs. Shakep.peare.

So many days my ewes have been with young; So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yearn. Shakep.peare.

This I scarcely drag along, Who yearning on the rocks has leit her young. Dryden.

Ewes year the polled lamb with the least danger. Mortimer.

YEANLING. n. f. [from yearn.] The young of sheep. All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied, Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakep.peare.

YEAR. n. f. [geap, Saxon.]

If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Watts's Logick.

See the minutes, how they run: How many makes the hour full compleat, How many hours bring about the day, How many days will finish up the year, How many years a mortal man may live. Shakep.peare.

With the year Seasons return, but not to me returns Day, or the sweet approach of morn. Milton.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year, as will serve for one or two incubations. Roy on the Creation.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year. Swift.

It is often used plurally, without a plural termination. I fight not once in forty year. Shakep.peare.

3. In the plural of age. Some mumble-news, That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents. Shakep. Love's Labour Lost.

There died also Cecile, mother to king Edward IV. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crown'd, and four murder'd. Bacon's Hen. VII.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were teen, A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.

14. Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains Of founding lasses, and of dragging chains. The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries, And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise. Dryden.

YEO

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.
YELLOW. adj. [yealepe, Saxon; gheleue, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.
Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shaksp. Henry VIII. Prologue.
He brought the green ear and the yellow sheaf. Milton.
After a lively orange, followed an intense bright and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.
Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.
YELLOWBOY. n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.
John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to see council. Arbutnot's John Bull.
YELLOWHAMMER. n. f. A bird.
YELLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.
Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward's Natural History.
YELLOWISHNESS. n. f. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.

appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon's Natural Hist.
Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbutnot.
2. It is used in Shakespeare for jealousy.
Ford I will possess with yellowness. Shakespeare.
YELLOWS. n. f. A disease in horses. It owes its original to obstructions in the gall-pipe, which are caused by slimy or gritty matter; or to the stoppage of the roots of those little ducts opening into that pipe, by the like matter; or to a compres-sion of them by a fulness and plenitude of the blood-vessels that lie near them. When the gall-pipe, or the roots rather of the common ducts of that pipe, are any wise stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is taken up by the vein, and carried back again into the mass of blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaver, and all the parts of the horse, that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow. Forrier's Dict.
His horse sped with spavins, and railed with the yellows.
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
TO YELP. v. n. [gealpan, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shak. H. VI.
YEOMAN. n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted;
the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from genan, Frick, a villager.]
1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.
Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.
He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man: he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.
2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeomen of the guard.
Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might,
And were enraged ready still for fight. Fairy Queen.
You, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
The mettle of your pasture. Shaksp. Henry V.
He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard.
Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.
At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make way for the dean, as if a duke pass'd by. Swift.
3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.
His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Spring cretells yeomen from so deep a root? Shak. H. VI.
4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.
A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.
YEOMANRY. n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.
This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

YET

TO YERK. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To throw out or move with a spring.
A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even, to their full extent. Farrier's Dict.
Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shaksp.
YERK. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick motion.
TO YERN. v. a. See YEARN.
I am not covetous of gold;
It yerns me not, if men my garments wear. Shak. H. V.
YES. adv. [gyre, Saxon.] A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.
This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yes, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.
Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind,
Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.
YE'STER. adj. [ghyster, Dutch; yesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.
Love might as well be fow'd upon our sands,
As in a breast so barren:
To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester fun beheld Must'ring her charms. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
YE'STERDAY. n. f. [gysteranæg, Saxon.] The day last past;
the day next before to-day.
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shaksp. Macbeth.
We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow. Job viii. 9.
You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same. Donne.
If yesterday could be recall'd again,
E'en now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.
Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Addison.
Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator.
Addison's Spectator.
Naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth; and in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie:
Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.
YE'STERDAY. adv. On the day last past.
Marius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.
YE'STERNIGHT. n. f. The night before this night.
YE'STERNIGHT. adv. On the night last past.
Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
For yesternight by Cateby was it sent me. Shaksp. R. III.
The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis yesternight. Bacon.
YET. conjunct. [gyt, yet, zeta, Saxon.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.
They had a king was more than him before;
But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.
Though such men have lived never so much upon the reserve; yet if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.
The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth? Tillot.
He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Let virtuosos in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.
YET. adv.
1. Beside; over and above.
This furnishes us with yet one more reason, why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.
2. Still; the state still remaining the same.
They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.
3. Once again.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light,
Indulges dread chaos and eternal night. Pope's Dunciad.

YIE

At this time; so soon; hitherto: with a negative before it.
Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, young men not yet; old men, not at all. Bacon.
5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.
A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.
6. It notes increase or extension of the sense of the words to which it is joined.
Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last:
A little longer, yet a little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryden.
Yet a few days, and those which now appear
In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.
7. Still; in a new degree.
He that takes from a thief, that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wickedest thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.
8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.
If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whitg.
Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to im-pute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.
Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
9. Hitherto.
Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hook.
YIVEN. for given.
Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?
Let that room to my lady be yiven;
She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.
YEW. n. f. [y, Saxon; yew, Welsh.] This is often written eyeb; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See EUGH. A tree of tough wood.
It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.
The floater yew, the broad-leav'd yew,
The barren plantane, and the walnut found;
The myrrhe, that her foul fin doth still deplore,
Alder the owner of all waterfild ground. Fairfax.
Slips of yew,
Shiver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.
He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew. Dryden.
The distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.
YEWEN. adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.
His stiff arms to stretch with yewen bow.
And many legs still passing to and fro. Hubler's Tale.
YEWRE. adv. [yerepe, Saxon.] Together. Spenser.
TO YIELD. v. a. [zelcan, Saxon, to pay.]
1. To produce; to give in return for cultivation or labour.
When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Gen. iv. 12.
Strabo tells us the mines at Carthage yielded the Romans, per diem, to the value of twenty-five thousand drachms, eight hundred and seven pounds five shillings and ten pence. Arbut.
2. To produce in general.
He makes milch kine yield blood. Shakespeare.
The wilderness yieldeth food for them. Job xxiv. 5.
All the substances of an animal, fed even with accefted substances, yield by fire nothing but alkaline salts. Arbutnot.
3. To afford; to exhibit.
Philodea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lout as that face could yield. Stanley.
The mind of man desireth evermore to know the truth, according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hooker.
If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yielded yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

YOK

4. To give as claimed of right.
I the praise
Yield thee, so well thou hast this day purvey'd. Milton.
5. To allow; to permit.
I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton.
Life is but air;
That yields a passage to the whistling sword,
And closes when 'tis gone. Dryden's Den Sebastian.
6. To emit; to expire.
Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast and wand'ring air. Shak. Rich. III.
He gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost. Gen. xlix. 33.
7. To resign; to give up.
He not yielding over to old age his country delights, especially of hawking, was at that time, following a merlin, brought to see this injury offered unto us. Stanley.
Thus I have yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. Shaksp. King John.
She to realities yield all her shows. Milton.
'Tis the pride of man which is the spring of this evil, and an unwillingness to yield up their own opinions. Watts.
8. To surrender.
The enemies sometimes offered unto the soldiers, upon the walls, great rewards, if they would yield up the city, and sometimes threatened them as fast. Kneller.
They laugh, as if to them I had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule. Milton.
TO YIELD. v. n.
1. To give up the conquest; to submit.
He yields not in his fall;
But fighting dies, and dying kills withal. Daniel.
All is not lost: immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield. Milton.
If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopp'd, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Walton's Angler.
There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field,
Pursu'd by fierce Achilles. Dryden.
2. To comply with any person.
Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.
I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper. Shaksp. King John.
This supernatural soliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion, Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair? Shaksp. K. Lear.
With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Prov.
The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Acts xxiii. 21.
3. To comply with things.
There could be no secure peace, except the Lacedemonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.
If much converse
Three satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milton.
4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.
If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.
5. To give place as inferior in excellence or any other quality.
The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dry.
Tell me in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.
YIELDER. n. f. [from yield.] One who yields.
Briars and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some sleeves, some hats; from yielders all things catch. Shak.
Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed, and yield up of breath. Shak. Hen. IV.

 To be th' yokefellow of your wit,
 Nor take one of so mean deserts
 To be the partner of your parts. Hudibras.
 Before Toulon thy yokemate lies,
 Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.
 Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Addison's Spectator.
YOLD, for yielded. Obsolete. Spenser.
YOLK, n. f. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.
 Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg, a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray on the Creation.
YON, adj. [geon; Saxon.] Being at a distance within view.
 Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
 Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakespeare.
 Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle, and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with fables? Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
 Tigranes, being encamped upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambassage, and too few for a fight. Bacon's Natural History.
 For proof look up,
 And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder allies green. Milton.

 The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance,
 And say what thou see'st yond. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 First, and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon foars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
 The cherub, contemplation. Milton.
Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbutn. and Pope.
YOND, adj. [I know not whence derived.] Mad; furious:
 perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind, in which sense it concurs with the rest.
 Then like a lion, which hath long time fought
 His robbed whelps, and at the last them found
 Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond;
 So fierce he laid about him. Fairy Queen.
 Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairy.
YORE, or Yore, adv. [geogara, Saxon.]
 1. Long.
 Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
 And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
 Which though he hath polluted oft and yore,
 Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Fairy Queen.

YOU

2. Of old time; long ago.
 Thee bright-ey'd Yesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.
 There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
 A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.
 In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
 Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd. Prior.
 The dev'l was piqu'd such faintship to behold;
 And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
 But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
 And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.
YOU, pron. [cop, juh, Saxon: the accusative of ge, ye.]
 1. The oblique case of ye.
 Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God,
 which is given me to you ward. Eph. iii. 2.
 I thought to show you
 How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
 And banish fate before you. Dryden's Cleomenes.
 2. It is used in the nominative; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established.
 You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
 Into her scornful eyes. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.
 Madam, the fates withstand, and you
 Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.
 4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on.
 We pass'd by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clouds. Addison on Italy.
YOUNG, adj. [jong, yeong, Saxon; jong, Dutch.]
 1. Being in the first part of life; not old.
 Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 He woos both high and low, both rich and poor,
 Both young and old. Shakespeare.
 There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
 But in his motion like an angel sings,
 Still quiring to the young-cy'd cherubims. Shakespeare.
 I firmly am resolv'd
 Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
 Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.
 Thou old and true Menenius,
 Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's.
 And venomous to thine eyes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 He ordain'd a lady for his prize,
 Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in house-wiferies. Chapman.
 In timorous deer he hanfels his young paws,
 And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.
 Nor need'st by thy daughter to be told,
 Though now thy spry blood with age be cold,
 Thou hast been young. Dryden.
 When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed.
 It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it.
 From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
 And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.
 2. Ignorant; weak.
 Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakespeare.
 3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.
 There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.
YOUNG, n. f. The offspring of animals collectively.
 The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
 That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 So many days my ewes have been with young;
 So many weeks ere the poor fools will yearn. Shakespeare.
 The eggs disclos'd their callow young. Milton.
 The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. Mor's Antidote against Divijm.
 Not to her young; for their unequal line
 Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
 Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate, Dryden.
 Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state.
 Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray on the Creation.

 How youngly he began to serve his country,
 How long continu'd, and what stock he springs of. Shakespeare.
 2. Ignorantly; weakly.
YOUNGLY, adv. [from young.] A young person. In contrast with YOUNKER.
 How like a younger or a prodigal
 The startled bark parts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind. Shakespeare.
 What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 See how the morning opes her golden gates,
 And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
 How well resembles it the prime of youth,
 Trim'd like a younger prancing to his love. Shakespeare.
 Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
 That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;
 And whilst the youngster from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
 Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
 And would outdo his father in his course. Crech.
 The youngster, who at nine and three,
 Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
 From breakfast reads till twelve o'clock,
 Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.
YOUNGTH, n. f. [from young.] Youth. Obsolete.
 The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask, Spenser.
 As she was wont in youngth and summer days,
 Your pronoun. [geop, Saxon.]
 1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak of more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.
 Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized
 by a trifle. Shakespeare.
 2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.
 Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakespeare.
 There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison on ancient Medals.
 A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Fenton on the Clafficks.
 3. You is used when the substantive goes before or is understood; as this is your book, this book is yours.
 Pray for this man and for his issue,
 Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
 And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
 One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakespeare.
 This kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
 Conceive and fare thee well. — Shakespeare's King Lear.
 He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east. Shakespeare.
 While the sword this monarchy secures,
 'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
 My wealth, my city and myself are yours. Dryden.
 It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.
YOURS, n. f. [yur and self.] You, even you; ye, not others.
 If it stand as you yourself still do,
 Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
 My purse, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
 O heav'ns!
 If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
 Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
 Make it your cause. Shakespeare's King Lear.

YOUTH

- YOUTH*, n. f. [yeogus, Saxon.]
 1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty eight.
 But could youth last, and love still breed,
 Had joys no date, and age no need;
 Then these delights my mind might move,
 To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.
 See how the morning opes her golden gates,
 And takes her farewell of the glorious sun;
 How well resembles it the prime of youth,
 Trim'd like a younger, prancing to his love. Shakespeare.
 His starry helm unbuckled shew'd him prime
 In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.
 The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.
 2. A young man.
 Siward's son,
 And many unrough yo. ths even now,
 Protek their first of manhood. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 If this were seen,
 The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
 What perils past, what croffes to ensue,
 Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakespeare.
 About him exercis'd heroic games
 Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.
 O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
 Androgos' death, and off'rings to his ghost;
 Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
 The fate appointed by revengful Crete. Dryden.
 The pious chief
 A hundred youths from all his train elects,
 And to the Latian court their course directs. Dryden.
 3. Young men. Collectively.
 As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben. Johnson.
 The graces put not more exactly on
 Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
 Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
 When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.
YOUTHFUL, adj. [youth and full.]
 1. Young.
 Our army is dispers'd already:
 Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course,
 East, west, north, south. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
 Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd
 Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.
 2. Suitable to the first part of life.
 Here be all the pleasures
 That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
 When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
 Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.
 In his years were seen,
 A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.
 The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
 Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.
 3. Vigorous as in youth.
 How is a good Christian animated by a steadfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first? no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.
YOUTHFULLY, adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.
YOUTHLY, adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obsolete.
 True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
 That warlike feats dost highest glorify,
 Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
 And many battles fought and many frays. Fairy Queen.
YOUTHY, adj. [from youth.] Young; youthful. A bad
 word.
 The scribler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into raillery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spektor.
YOUTHY, part. [y and pitch, from pitch.] Fixed.
 His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
 Far underneath a craggy cliff youthy,
 Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.
